The Modoc Stronghold.

A VISIT TO CAPTAIN JACK'S CAMP IN THE LAVA BED, A FEW WEEKS AGO.

[CONCLUDED.]

The whole force was out waiting for us in front of their little houses, which were huddled together like beehives. For the next five minutes the scene was lively. Men, women and naked children came rushing up to see us dismount, and then began such a hand-shaking as is only seen at a Presidential levee. The warriors were all there: Scar-faced Charley, Shack Nasty Jim, Hooka Jim, the Doctor, old Schonchin, Black Jim, Long Jim, and dozens of others more or less noted. Captain Jack was ill in his cave, and could not come; but he had sent word to the "Boston men" that he wanted to see them as soon as they had had their supper, and his message was delivered by Scar-Face. As soon as Steele dismounted, all the Indians were delighted to see him, and huddled around him like children. They were all armed with revolvers, but their guns had been put away, Bogus Charley having sent them word by the scouts, that the whites were unarmed. They were probably too proud to made a display of their strength, when they knew we trusted them completely.

After much hand-shaking and a great display of curiosity on all sides, the Indians gave way and some of them showed us where to put the horses for the night. Hooka Jim led the pack-horse and the rest followed. The place selected was a little farther up the ravine, where a smooth, level place was found, and here they were fed and tethered for the night. The party were then shown to a tent occupied by a squaw known as "Wild Gal." A fire was built, the provisions got out—hard biscuits, coffee and bacon—and supper was cooked by Mrs. Riddle. Having no kitchen furniture she was obliged to use Wild Gal's. The coffee was green and had to be roasted and ground, but this didn't take long. Wild Gal ground it between two flat stones. Mrs. Riddle fried the bacon in an old frying-pan stolen from Louis Land's ranch at the time of the massacre. Having no other vessel to use for the broken hardbread, Wild Gal kindly lent us her hat, and it answered as excellent purpose, barring certain unpleasant reflections that would crowd themselves into even our hungry imaginations. While Mrs. Riddle was fixing the supper the Chronicle man went outside the tent, ostensibly to look after his horse, but really to get a look at the Indian stronghold before night set in. To the unmilitary eye of the correspondent the place seemed absolutely impregnable. The principal portion of the camp is situated in a huge opening or widening of the ravine, of perhaps an acre in area. On all sides of the opening which seems more like a huge washbowl than anything else, the natural wall rises a hundred feet or more; but it is easily scaled, for the inner side is inclined and the rocks are sharp and jut out all over it. Once in this basin and there is but one open way out, and that is by the trail we entered. There are other ways out, but they are by tunnels leading to the many caves or sink holes in another part of the lava bed. On the outside of this basin there is a succession of ridges as high as that which incloses it, but these do not extend all the way around. To the west of the basin is a flat, table like surface of lava, extending from this very summit of its rim clear back for more than a mile. In this level place are the sink-holes or caves, formed thousands of years ago, perhaps in the cooling of this immense body of molten earth. The opening of the holes are very small; indeed, one does not see them until he has almost fallen in, but they widen as they go down, and their sides being sloping, one can pick his way to the bottom without difficulty. Most of these caves are connected with each other and with the large basin by subterranean passages, so that one can go for half a mile in the bed without coming to the surface at all. This is of incalculable benefit in defending the stronghold, for one man can keep a hundred at bay almost anywhere in it without fear of being smoked out or having his retreat cut off.

After supper, which, by the way, was shared with a keen relish by about a dozen naked Indian babies, Bogus Charley came and said he would conduct us to Captain Jack. So the whole party gathered up their blankets and followed. Charley led the way right up one side of the basin, through a little trail, not easy of ascent by unpracticed feet, and across the level place about fifty yards, when we came suddenly to the mouth of a pit-hole at least forty feet deep. The hole inclined as it led downward, and at the bottom widened and formed a perfect cave, extending under the rock at least fifty feet. At the mouth o the cave proper, but yet thirty or forty feet below the surface, a piece of canvas was stretched. This was Captain Jack's front door, and the cave behind it was his abiding place—the palace of the Modoc King. Behind the canvas we could see a bright fire burning and nearly the whole tribe encircled around it ready for the talk which they knew was to come. The descent into the cave was somewhat perilous, but by a vigorous clinging to the rocks and careful stepping we managed to reach the canvas. Then throwing that back, we stood in the presence of Captain Jack.

It was easily seen that he was sick. His eye was dull, cheeks emaciated, and he was so weak he could not stand, but remained reclining on a huge pile of bear skins, with his two wives by his side. Mr. Steele went up to him and shook hands warmly, as did the rest of the party. Then passing completely around the circle, all shook hands with the entire tribe. This ceremony lasted several minutes, and, when finished, we were furnished seats in the circle near Captain Jack. The only wood in the Lava Bed is sagebrush, but this was piled on the fire with an unsparing hand, and the flames shot upward and illuminated the cave brilliantly. Then each member of our party lighted his pipe and, after taking a whiff or two, passed it around to the right, beginning with Captain Jack, who took a whiff and passed it on to the next, and so on.
