Dr. Root was then placed in the witness chair and testified to the same things that Dr. Mayo did, only adding that the pussy condition of the neys indicated Bright's disease. When taken in hand by Attorney Nye he described the condition of the face and ascribed the hemorrhage in the brain to a sudden shock which would, he thought be due more to a sharp blow from a fist than the hard jar that would result from a fall. He also beleved that the hemorrhage followed immediately the blow that caused it. He was then asked by Mr. Nye, how soon after the hemorrhage would there be a perceptible effect upon the vic tim. He replied that that depended upon the rapidity with which the blood flowed from the rupture. He thought that in this case of Odgers the flow was slow and the effect therefore did no immediately follow the hemorrhage.
