His statement was to Platt's Mall to listen to his lecture the effect that he was sitting at his on the "Problem of Life." Mr. Tilton has been so frequently described that he is as familiar to the members of every American household as any public man. It did not take him long to place himself on the best of terms with his audi-ence, which listened to him with marked attention, and frequently expressed its approval by hearty applause. His voice is flexible and sonorous, and his elocution is of a high order. He spoke for nearly an hour and a half.²⁹
