WHAT WATER DID NOT DO.

It would seem that the special correspondents sent by the English press to America the past season largely belonged to the "hoaby" class, and that the way they were "guyed" in many quarters indicated to a marked degree their imbecility and irresponsibility as newspaper men. This has been shown up in the experience of several parts of the country, and Utah is getting its share. A few days ago we made reference to the absurdities of a special correspondence from this city to the London Telegraph, and now have occasion to note in the same connection a like correspondence to the London Mail. The writer to the last named paper signs himself G. W. Steevens; and if his letters disclose anything worthy of reading, from the standpoint of accuracy, it is not easily discernible. There is a lot of trash about how missionaries are sent out by the Church and what is done with converts who come to Utah; also about Church organization, polygamy, and other matters associated with the Mormon people, all intended, of course, to throw discredit on the Mormons. The source of information is alleged to be prominent residents of Salt Lake City, from where the letters are assumed to be written. Among those to whom Mr. Steevens relates as giving him information are a "judge" who edits a newspaper and a "judge" who is secretary of the Chamber of Commerce. Here is an extract from one of the Steevens letters:

"But Brigham Young was a big man?" said I.

"He was a natural boss," said the judge, "but no near so big a man as his people made out. He pretended to receive telephone messages from the Almighty every time, and they did what he told them. But he was a bully and a braggart; he hadn't any real courage. He was not a Mahomet, sir."

"But he did a lot here."

"He had a lot of men working. It looks wonderful to make a garden out of a desert; but it was the water did it. A tribe of civilized Indians down in New Mexico had done it before, and the Spaniards had always irrigated. I guess you won't find anything here in the way of irrigation they haven't got in Egypt. And you can water this land in a year; bank East it took a man a lifetime to clear his patch of forest."

That was the view of a man who had taught Mormonism for twenty years and had reason in it.

Whether the foregoing came from the "judge"-editor or the "judge"-secretary, or some other "judge," Mr. Steevens does not make quite clear, so the honors may go where they will. But in view of the fact that many of the reading public accept newspaper statements as true, the "humor" which led to "guying" the green Britisher in the foregoing fashion will not be appreciated by Utah people. No doubt all the land under canals here can be watered in a year; it is profitably irrigated several times a year, which is more than can be said of some other subjects under a different species of "irrigation." But the Indians did not do it, and the Spaniards did not do it, and the Egyptians did not do it, in Utah; neither did water make the Utah desert a garden. The people who plowed and planted and cultivated; who made the roads and built the bridges; who constructed the dams, reservoirs, canals and ditches; who fought famine, and drouth, and Indians, and devouring insects; who brought out the water from mountain gorges or hidden springs and applied it in parched soil and thirsty vegetation, when they had coaxed that vegetation into existence by ceaseless thought, and toil, and worry—these are the people who made of the desert a garden. The "water did it" story is not told by those who have practical knowledge of irrigation by water, for they know it is not true. Neither did water-power reel off the stories about Utah told to the gullible Englishman who writes for the Mail.

A SCHOOL FOR MOTHERS.

One Mrs. Stanton-Blatch is quoted by the San Francisco Chronicle as saying that "New York nursemaids are Swiss and New York mothers are fools!" The lady says she has seen much, but never more of a childish inferno, where a childish heaven ought to be, than the baby parade grounds of Central park. She does not believe there is much help for this condition to be hoped for from club women. She hopes better things from the alumnæ of the women's colleges, and consequently wants to establish a post graduate course in "mothering" for college graduates. She wants to see some first class university open its doors not only to its own graduates, but to those of other colleges, where they may go when they become engaged to be married and take a three, six or nine months' course in the scientific way to keep a house and raise a baby.

No one will deny that there is a good deal of sense in these remarks. But it is doubtful whether a three, six or nine months' course, as suggested, would prove effective. The best school for the development of the qualities necessary in a mother is a home, and the best teachers are the mothers. The trouble is that there is a tendency in the world to regard the duties of motherhood and housekeeping as vastly inferior to more public functions. This erroneous idea is instilled into the minds of girls and the training at home neglected. A course in a college would be but a poor substitute for the education that really belongs to the home sphere.

MUNICIPAL AND PARTY POLITICS.

Partisanship in municipal politics has been very objectionable to a large proportion of the citizens in this nation, and as a result city elections in many of the states are now held at a different date from that on which general elections take place. This advanced position has been taken in this State, hence municipal elections hereafter are to be removed from questions of national party politics, and city officers may be chosen because of their personal integrity and fitness, and their attitude on questions of special local interest.

The wisdom of making this distinction, in that it gives the voters a full opportunity to express their views in a widely divergent fashion so far as national politics is concerned, has received further endorsement in the recent city elections in Massachusetts. On the state and national tickets there in November everything went wholly Republican; and if city elections had been held at the same time there is no doubt but that success would have attended the Republican municipal candidates generally because of the influences affecting state and national issues. But the deferring of city elections to December produced another result; in such case national party lines were disregarded to a marked extent, and men who would not have thought of casting a vote for the candidate of an opposing party at the November election were found among the vigorous workers for such candidates in December. The outcome of this was that while in national politics the successful candidates are known as partisans, yet in local matters nonpartisanship must be their guide to insure success. An illustration of the change wrought in party majorities between general and municipal elections is given in the city of Worcester, where a Republican majority of 7,000 in November was transformed a month later into a majority of 1,500 for a Democratic nominee for mayor.

This instance is only a sample of the general experience, showing that good government and the full liberty of expression by the people are best conserved by keeping general and municipal elections apart. The voters easily may have pronounced views on national party politics, which views may be the opposite of those held by officers whom they would desire to have represent them in a purely local capacity; for it is an inconsistency which marks human weakness for men to have opinions on state or national policy entirely at variance with those they hold on local affairs. Some lines of politics grasp only the general trend of state or nation, while others are not broad enough to cover more than the detail of immediate local administration. This applies to the politics of parties as well as of individuals. And the requirement to meet such a condition is found in fixing different dates for municipal and general elections. It is a systematic classification of the work of the electorate as essential as is methodical operation in business or educational matters.

AUSTRIA AND TURKEY.

The representative of the London Chronicle in Rome states that he has learned that Lord Salisbury has directed an inquiry to the governments of Italy and Germany as to their attitude in case England, Russia and France should decide on armed intervention in Turkey. This, if true, would seem to indicate that the three powers are preparing for the denouement of the Turkish tragedy in eastern Europe. It is doubtful, however, whether anything has transpired so far of a nature to convince Turkish diplomacy of the impossibility of escaping the impending fate, by the usual course of arousing the jealousy of one nation against the other and thus dissolving the coalition.

Turkey has at least one friend in Europe. Austria derives much of her income from trade with the people under Turkish rule, and an arrangement such as that proposed by Russia would undoubtedly draw the current of trade in other channels. The Vienna government cannot forget that Russia in 1877 was at the point of invading Austria instead of the sultan's dominions, and the distrust thus created must operate in favor of the Turks. Austria is not exactly a strong power, but she still has a voice in the affairs of Europe, and that will naturally be used in the interest of the maintenance of status quo. This is undoubtedly one of the causes that tends to delay the final settlement of the Turkish question in the only way it can be settled permanently and satisfactorily.

GROSS MISREPRESENTATION OF UTAH.

A short time ago Secretary of State Hammond received a letter from a wealthy resident of Glasgow, Scotland, who is largely interested in the sugar industry at Greenock and who desired to know something of the beet-sugar opportunities in Utah, with a view of investing a large amount of money thereto. The wealthy gentleman, Mr. Stewart, presented a long list of inquiries, intended to elicit the desired information. It appears that a similar letter was sent to officials in other states and territories, one being received by Hon. Lorion Miller, secretary of New Mexico. New Mexico has a large sugar factory just started in the Pecos valley, at which place the chemist of the Utah sugar factory spent some time last season giving the people information concerning beet raising and sugar production. Mr. Miller referred Mr. Stewart's letter to A. C. Campbell, of Eddy, N. M., general attorney of the Pecos irrigation and improvement company, and the Pecos Valley Argus says Mr. Campbell's response is "a complete and very satisfactory reply." Here is one of its statements:

In Utah lands are owned by Mormons, and held in small tracts, and are not for sale at any price except to a Mormon.

That a person in the territory of New Mexico, with sufficient learning and assumed respectability to be admitted to the bar, should be so grossly ignorant of the law or so wilfully perverse in morals as to utter such a base falsehood seems incredible, but the proof is conclusive. And there can be no excuse for this alleged lawyer making such an utterance. He knows, when he knows anything of the land laws in the United States, that the condition he describes is an utter impossibility under those laws; that there is in Utah as well as in New Mexico a vast area of the public domain not yet passed to private ownership; that it is as open to non-Mormon as to Mormon. And if he knows that which any person of ordinary intelligence may learn, he also knows that non-Mormons as well as Mormons have taken up land in Utah under the national laws, and still hold the same; that there are hundreds of non-Mormons who have purchased lands from Mormons and others; that there are tens of thousands of acres, improved and unimproved, in this State that are for sale today to anyone who will pay the purchase price, in which transaction the fact of the buyer being a Mormon or not never will be thought of; that there is a vast area of State lands open to any purchaser who will pay for them; and that Mr. Campbell's assertion upon this subject is a most contemptible falsehood. The people of this State desire the success of New Mexico, are pleased with the prosperity attending the sugar factory there, and trust the future has still greater advancement in store; and they believe the people of New Mexico generally have an equally kindly feeling toward Utah. If this latter be the actual sentiment in New Mexico, Secretary Miller will not stultify himself and his people by allowing Lawyer Campbell's statement to go uncontradicted. When Mr. Stewart notes it in comparison with the reply forwarded by Secretary of State Hammond of Utah, he cannot fail to observe its inaccuracy and thus have a doubt cast upon all the other statements in the letter which make New Mexico appear a desirable place for the investment of capital.

THE DECISION of the Supreme court of the State on the school tax question will be a heavy blow to the county schools financially, and may compel some to the unfortunate position of having to close. But the controversy is ended, and submission to the rule inculcated is the only course. In the meantime those in cities of the first and second class who paid a county school tax are entitled to a refund of the amount. This can be accomplished by an amicable arrangement on the part of the county collector early in the new year; or if he refuses, it can be enforced by proceedings at law. It is hardly probable, however, that any collector will want to cause this extra trouble to litigation. It is likely that a decision as to the course to pursue will be reached in a few days, when those who have paid the tax will know what to expect. As for property owners in the county, they may anticipate an increased school tax in 1897.

THE DECISION of the State Supreme court on the validity of the Australian ballot law is being awaited with anxiety by the people. There is no doubt but that the court will declare what the constitutional situation is, but the people are all expectancy to get the information. Therefore it is good news to learn that the decision will be forthcoming not later than Friday of this week.

EVERYBODY IN UTAH TO READ THIS

WHISKEY IS THERE A MORE BEAUTIFUL city in the world than Salt Lake? Where is there another city of its size that has as large a proportion of all luxuries crowding the American continent stop to call, too to any mining camp in Nevada, Idaho, Montana, Wyoming or Colorado and ask the miner and the mining man where they expect to live when they make a stake, and almost invariably they will tell you in Salt Lake or go to any city in the East, let the people know you are from Utah and a large percent of them will say, "I have always had a desire to go to visit Salt Lake City to live." Now is it not reasonable to presume that every one speaking its praise, that this city is destined to have a steady, healthy growth and become a great city. Of course no one thousand and one sometimes which is the greatest? Would not the variety of music, your patronage and ever hearkened to the great hall Lake and the valley Pavilion, with its the most nothing in the world, owned by from twenty to twenty-five thousand people in a day. It is but evident there will be built here, in the near future, hotels, restaurants, places to amusements, cyclorama and parks, with skate rinks, casino, fountains, drive-ways, etc., where families will go during the hot months to enjoy a cool breeze from the Lake. When you consider that Saltair Cottage City at Saltair Beach is on the main line of the Salt Lake & Los Angeles railroad, which will be a direct line to the Pacific coast, you must realize the value of ground at this point. Fairfield Cottage City begins at a point on the Lake and extends along the railway towards Salt Lake City, giving a frontage of one and one quarter miles along the track.

I will sell lots in this plat until January the 1st, 1897, for $1.50 each, cash payments 25 cents weekly, payments 25 cents, warranty deed. Call at office and get a fine three-colored lithograph map. To accommodate those who are busy during the day I will keep my office open until 8:30 p. m.
