him shy. But he's no fool when it comes to understanding his bunzoes. He is the best read man in these parts on the subject of agriculture, though no one would think it to look at him. I don't reckon he ever talked at a meeting before in his life, but he had to get up and say something. Everyone clapped their hands when he got up, for he is well known in the country. This seemed to suit or reassure him, and when he finally got started he told the farmers there something about raising apples they had never heard of. He explained all about taking care of orchards, how to prune, and last of all he emphasized the importance of spraying for insect enemies. Well, I wish you could have seen the interest that crowd took in the old man's speech. He, with his little squeaky voice, and every man in the room straining his neck to hear what was said.

Now Uncle Asa is the most popular man in the neighborhood. And his speech will do his neighbors some good, too. Think I to myself there is a lesson in that. If Uncle Asa had kept still, as he had always done before, simply because he was too shy to talk before the meeting, what he knew would be of little use to his fellow men, while as it is he has given them information that will help them and has gained their respect. People who are silent may know a lot or they may be dummies, but no one is going to know which unless they talk. Of course if they are the latter it is better for them to keep still, but if the former it is better for their hearers that they talk. —Uncle Joe in Farmers' Journal.

JUDGED BY HIS WORK.

When the foreign missionary had concluded his talk, he made the usual appeal for contributions, however small. Coming up to the platform with several others, a small boy mounted to the level of the lecturer and hastening toward him, said: "Please, sir, I was very much interested in your lecture, and—"

"Go on, my little man," said the missionary encouragingly. "You want to help in the good work?"

"Not exactly, sir," said the boy. "What I want to know is, have you any foreign stamps you don't want?"

—Success.

Musings on the Farmers' Institute

I ATTENDED a farmer's institute meeting today down at the county seat. While I am not a great hand at talking at these meetings I always attend and give them the benefit of my presence. And then I learn something, too—have things suggested to me about which I can think and study for days, usually with much benefit. Why don't more farmers attend these meetings, I wonder? One man I was talking to about farmers' institutes said the principal reason he did not attend was because he felt he knew more about farming than the institute speakers who tried to tell him how it was done. "Then, that is the reason you should attend," said I. "If you can tell your neighbors something they don't know and would benefit by knowing it is your duty to go to these meetings and tell them." "Perhaps that is so," said he, and he went away dithering and thoughtful like. I am in for helping everything that comes along if it is going to help the man who raises the crops to feed the world. "The more the merrier" is my rule, so I go and try to get every one else to go too when a farmers' meeting is called. Funny how the presence of a large number of people will inspire confidence and help the cause along—that is if the people are there in the right spirit. But, talking of farmers' institute meetings, I was tickled today at old Uncle Asa Jones. They called on him to get up and tell how it was he could always raise good apples when the crop was a failure in every one else's orchard. Uncle Asa is a little, old, gray-haired man who has been farming since the early pioneer days. He is a thoroughly practical man, but very funny in some ways. He never talks much and always seems kind of afraid of everybody; perhaps you would call
