PRINCESS TEA GOWN WITH LINGERIE TRIMMINGS.

Since the return to favor of the tea gown many new and novel effects have been shown in this class of garments, and so attractive are they that many women have taken to wearing tea gowns for informal home dinners. The majority of them are made to form, or at least artistically suggest, the lines of the figure, having long trains and short sleeves and moderately low necks. Princess designs are especially favored. One of these shows a lingerie front of batiste bands entre deux with bands of Val lace. This front extends from the bustline down. The rest of the garment is of pale blue albatross with hand-embroideries in white silk. A Dutch collar is described with insets of embroidered batiste and lace. An undersleeve of the lingerie fabric with lace trimmings extends several inches below the slashed sleeve of the albatross.
