Mr. Dewey Richards was called to Washington on important business Wednesday in con-nection with the copyright bill that the musical composers are giving their un-divided attention to at present. Victor Herbert seems to be the moving spirit and he summoned Mr. Richards with the others to the conference: the con-vention was in session, morning, after-noon and evening. The big composers of America are all represented, and a very warm time is promised those who are opposing the musical in their en-deavors to protect their interests. HOW EASTER SUNDAY IS SPENT IN CAPTIVITY

Easter Sunday in a prison is comed as one of the great days of the year, when there is a little extra indul-gence in the way of eating and amuse-The religious services are by some talented prisoner. The religious services are brief, most of the time being taken up by the choir. The whole is over in about an hour and a ball. Then comes the march back to the cells, each man receiving as ho passes the mess room a tin containing his afternoon meal, which consists of three hard bolled eggs, some cold po-tatoes and as much bread as he cares to take. Taking his place at the lever which locks every door on that igh-lery, the keeper waits until each man is in his place. At the signal each door is closed with a bang, snap goes the lever, and 50 doors are securely locked. There comes the count. Each man stands behind his door, which, being formed of iron bars, permits him to be plainly seen, and as the keeper knocks with his key in passing answers "Here," A second keeper repeats the count, and then for the present each man is left to the enjoyment of his

The prison officials endeav-or as far as possible to make the day a little different from the usual Sun-day, though, with the best intentions, they cannot do much. Easter Sunday begins for the pris-oners at about haif past 7, when the steat prison bell rings and the guards unlock the cell doors. Away down the corridor yon hear the stamp, stamp, as of an advancing giant. Line after line of black and gray siriped ligures march out on their way to breakfast. The mess room, with its rows of desk-like tables, capable of sesting more than a thousand men, looks like an im-piense schoolroom. At the end of each table is a great pile of bread cut in thick slices, beside which stands a keeper. Each man on taking his seat finds before him a tin plate containing his breakfast, a pint of coffee, a slice of bread and a knife and fork. If he wants more bread, he holds up his right hand and the guard at the end of the table passes it to him. By holding up his plate or cup he can get more coffee or whatever there may be for breakfast. Waste is avoided, but no man need go away from the table unatisfied. After a busy quarter of an hour the keeper in charge of the first company knocks on the table, and the guarter of an hour the keeper in charge of the first company knocks on the table, and the men in his charge, some 50 or 60, rise at once and form into line, each car-rying his knife and fork in the box are used for that purpose.
