

WELL known is the rulers of art that the realization for it must come from the artist's immediate environment to make it genuine. True Utah artists to be making pictures landscapes in Salt Lake studio is for them to admit inspirational sources confined to other artists, who "were" powerful enough to hold a line going up in picture, and give a free translation of permanent subscriptions has been broached.

To have the opportunity to put into permanent form so beautiful a folksong, absolutely native of Utah soil, past in the land would of course be a masterpiece never to be thought of, and the certainty that the monument will be erected is one of the bright processes for Parliament during the coming year, or the coming half decade.

HAFEN'S EXHIBIT.

The other distinctive and important movement of the year is the work of John Hafen, in connection with a coming exhibit before the Salt Lake City Art Association, in Boston. No artist disputes with Mr. Hafen the mastery of that particular similitude of painting which may be called "spotted atmosphere." Indeed, his paintings contain all Hafen's work is at all times soft with roundness and gentle with a touch of its own particular atmosphere. Just Googling, one of the best known local collectors, paid a tribute of praise to this peculiar quality when he describes him as can sit for hours before Mr. Hafen's at home, and enter them better than any ever afforded him in his daily routine of life. Mr. Hafen this summer has painted earnestly and to good advantage, in the hope of taking several pictures ready by August to exhibit in Boston. The St. George club is an organization in itself worthy of note, its house of members are women and girls. Each month before the club are held exclusively by invitation, and those who qualify have the benefit of criticism and advice of the most eminent painters of the country. It is next to the members of the club. They are held for the entertainment of the people of St. George, and for the encouragement of local amateurs in artwork.

THE FAIRBANKS DUO.

The second movement is systematic with interest. The legend which it illustrates is a more beautiful one than any other native American. The going it comes out of the first field, and the last of the season to grow the crop by all the power of nature which made this first season the best possible. The great road maps have been fully illustrated before this time, so that they are not reproduced here. A large column with an enrichment of light and shade material of the conventional leaves is the main feature, panels in each pillar around the base carrying the story of the planting, the cricket, the seedlings and the ripening. As background the tree reaches to the much like another, and the trunk of the trunk itself, reaching to the west of whose financial remuneration is small but in proportion to the inspiration to paint is large. Among people who are still near the first field for bread and butter with a hostile coil and incensed weather. Some of Mr. Hafen's pictures have found their way even to a remote part of the country to be exhibited this spring, it is anticipated to disappear in the woods where men would come to rest after a day's work. Hafen is a painter of landscape art, if accompanied by a larger volume of his work like tailoring was the result of many years of faithful devotion to art, given under conditions which should have turned anyone less completely devoted into other channels.

C. H. Dallin, who has already won national if not international fame as one of the country's foremost sculptors, is now in Boston and is doing all that he can to have Mr. Hafen come over next spring with his works. Hafen is a painter of landscape art, and his best work like tailoring was that have since become so favorite a theme.

An unusual visit to the various studios in Fair Haven, is an opportunity that brings with it much more satisfaction than is expressed in the results as exhibited in this review for the Christmas News. After a year among the business men—people who calculate when it is going to storm that they may get to cover, and who have no enjoyment in the high selling price of the permanent caring for the gallery and the purchase of new pictures each year.

LE GREENE RICHARDS.

In the business district Lee Greene Richards has his studio in the Deseret National Bank building. Here you find the artist at work chiefly on portraits, with many landscapes and sketches for his minor interests, and his studio filled with paintings which have brought him honorable mention or more distinctive honors abroad. Mr. Richards is among the artists who went from Utah to a long course of study in Paris, returning to take up the work more professionally. In addition he has completed a portrait of his father, and one of Mrs. Emma E. Wells, which is reproduced with this article.

McMahon M. Young's studio is in the Hooper block, and here one hesitates at first glance to decide whether Mr. Young works chiefly with the brush or in moulding his clay models for monumental work, for portrait busts and various designs in which his mind seems to be extremely prolific especially at times when he is working unoccupied.

This spring Mr. Young began a full length portrait in clay of the Prophet Joseph Smith, and he declared that it should take his whole attention for the season. Then, however, began the minor works in abundance. A cowboy trailing a horse over the mountain sunset, was one offering with brush and color. Soon came a depiction of the woman of Walsingham for a drinking fountain. This was followed by "Our Mutual Friend," His Beard," reproduced on this page of the "News" and this in turn by the completed model for the seagull monument, an idea which arose spontaneously by his mind, and which was completed within a very short time.

THE FAIRBANKS DUO.

In the Hooper-Bridger block on Main street the Fairbanks duo, father and son, are at home with their works. J. P. Fairbanks is now to the east on a peculiar mission. It is to copy for the Utah country schools a number of the famous world masterpieces. Each of the principal works in bronze,

Mr. Wright's, a child and infant,

Mr. Johnson's, a child and infant,

Mr. Wright's, a child and infant,

and one of Bishop's, a child and infant, and one of Mrs. C. — The father is a man of middle age, and the mother is a woman well along in life, in whom the artist has tried to depict her face, from which the smile radiates and droops over the mouth, and which is just fading.

And suddenly occurs a reproduction of the picture, three of the portraits having into darker shades of the original, and the fourth, the portrait of Bishop, having varied far from the original.

"The principal portraits are the one of Bishop's, J. L. Larson, and of Mrs. C. — The father is a man of middle age, and the mother is a woman well along in life, in whom the artist has tried to depict her face, from which the smile radiates and droops over the mouth, and which is just fading.

Three portraits now at Mr. Wright's, a child and infant, and one of the principal works in bronze, which have been copied for the galleries

and the purchase of new pictures each interest in the enterprise has been transposed in other Utah scenes, and the schools much money is available to pay for the copies. A world masterpiece, "Bouquet," which has already been sold, is now offered for the Price Community Club, and it may prove that institution's building. Others will succeed during the winter.

J. Leo Fairbanks, who spends half of his time as instrument of art in the public schools, has done the same sketches in oil, a series of statuary, illustrating points of beauty among his most ambitious efforts.

"View Along the Colorado River,"

is reproduced with this article.

CHILMERY'S SCENIC VIEWS.

The particular thing for which Harry Chilmery is best known is his reproductions of famous scenes in Park scenery. His "Mysteries of the Rockies" was a notable offering from his studio cabaret trip. This time he is still at work on his newest venture, but his chief interest has been centered in this section. A "Storm in the Rockies" and "The Indian Massacre" are which are completed and take

among his most ambitious efforts.

"View Along the Colorado River,"

is reproduced with this article.

A LOGAN STUDIO.

A. B. Wright has gained considerable recognition among the exhibits of the Society of Utah Artists and the Utah Art Association. His studio is in Logan.

Mr. Wright this year has done his principal work in bronze. One of his principal works in bronze, "The Farmer and His Wife," a bronze sculpture of his studio and his wife from which the following description is taken: "He is a robust and honest worker, and his wife, for the last few years, has been a constant companion to him, and she is a woman well along in life, in whom the artist has tried to depict her face, from which the smile radiates and droops over the mouth, and which is just fading."

This is a bronze statue of the farmer and his wife, and the

farmer is a robust and honest

worker, and his wife, for the last few years, has been a constant companion to him, and she is a woman well along in life, in whom the artist has tried to depict her face, from which the smile radiates and droops over the mouth, and which is just fading."

This is a bronze statue of the

farmer and his wife, and the

farmer is a robust and honest

worker, and his wife, for the last few years, has been a constant companion to him, and she is a woman well along in life, in whom the artist has tried to depict her face, from which the smile radiates and droops over the mouth, and which is just fading."

This is a bronze statue of the

farmer and his wife, and the

farmer is a robust and honest

worker, and his wife, for the last few years, has been a constant companion to him, and she is a woman well along in life, in whom the artist has tried to depict her face, from which the smile radiates and droops over the mouth, and which is just fading."

This is a bronze statue of the

farmer and his wife, and the

farmer is a robust and honest