Eyraud, the French Murderer, and His Boating in Prison
at Havana.

EXTRAID IN PRISON.
The Notorious Murderer Makes a Voluntary Statement.

HAVANA, May 29.—When Eyraud, the murderer of the Notary Gaudin, was arraigned for examination he admitted to the magistrate that he had tried to kill himself by opening the valve in his arm and leg, "I have long been tired of life," he said, "and anxious to end this existence. Men are so sad. I meant to kill myself at the time of my arrest and the one thing that I regret is that I was prevented. The man thing which drives me to suicide is the impossibility to use of crimes which I never dreamed of committing. Yes," he cried, "with animation, "men are very sad, worse than can be imagined."

Eyraud is confined in one of the strongest prisons of Havana. His cell is very simply furnished with a cot in the center and a seat in the corner. The prisoner spends most of his time lying on the bed, or sitting on his cot. He dresses in a white shirt and a pair of white trousers, which he never takes off. Two guards are always by him at each end of the bed. They carry no arms for fear that Eyraud might profit by a moment of distraction to take a weapon from them and kill himself. Outside the cell stands another guard, with gun and bayonet. There is nothing within Eyraud's reach with which he could take his own life.

of grievances, failing to obtain

THE LEE MONUMENT.
Colonel Anderson, Delivering a Stirring Address at the Unveiling.

RICHMOND, Va., May 29.—The weather is clear and beautiful.
Since daylight kinds of those who are to take part in the parade have been gathering upon the streets.
The confederate camps, military and civilian, continue to arrive.
The country folks are pouring into town in great numbers, and the streets are filled with them.
Now and then a band of music starts the crowds cheering.
"Bonny Blue Flag,"
"Dixie" and "Maryland, my Maryland." As some favorite con-fessioner is recognized by the crowd a yell arises from them, which is carried along until he halts or turns off into some side street. As the various commands reach their starting points with some familiar officer at their head, cheer after cheer rings out. The chief marchers, General Pickens, Lieut. and General Early, Johnston and Longstreet receive similar ovations as they move about from place to place.
