LOGAN.

TESTIMONY OF SHERIFF CORDON

At the Malters Trial—Large Attendance at B. Y. College.

Logan, Cache Co., Utah, Sept. 24.—Sheriff Cordon was on the stand during the whole of Tuesday afternoon. He was interrogated by Attorney Neleker, and gave a graphic account of the tragic case between the officers and the Malters brothers.

After corroborating the testimony of Deputy Sheriff Frank Thompson as to the first pursuit of the robbers, Sheriff Cordon testified in substance as follows:

In company with Officers William Brown and Gilbert Belnap of Ogden I followed the Malters brothers to the Hot Springs, Idaho, where they were first and shot. "Here they are," then Belnap and I commanded them to stop, but they kept on running. We followed them a short distance, and they disappeared behind some trees, and we followed them probably ten minutes before they came in sight again. We called again to them to stop, but they continued running, and this time down a steep hill. Captain Brown fired a shot toward them, and this brought on a general fusillade, when finally one of the robbers fell. The other, who held a large black revolver, fired at Brown as he ran, and missed him. He then stopped, took deliberate aim for two or three seconds, and fired again. The shot struck Brown, who fell and rolled forward down the hill. The fugitive then hid himself behind a rock a few feet from where his brother lay dead. We called to him to surrender and he came forward. We called to him to surrender and he came forward. We called to him to surrender and he came forward.
