Smith had been detained at the post after his command left for Fort Russell, to be tried for stealing. Yesterday was at work under guard at the quartermaster's department. While the attention of the sentry, Private H. A. Bartlett, of F company, Twenty-ninth infantry, was momentarily attracted elsewhere, Smith darted out of the door for Red Butte canyon.

The sentry called three times to halt, but Smith kept on. He was shot by the sentry three shots on either side of the sprinter and over his head, and Smith ran faster yet. Then the sentry darted after him and sent a heavy straight through Smith's body. The injured man ran 25 feet, turned a somersault, and fell. He was picked up and taken to the hospital, where the surgeons thought at first that his wound was fatal. But today there was an improvement.

It will be remembered by readers of the "News" that one day last week Nello Monticelli, sometimes known as "Cowboy Nell," a young girl, hailing from Montrose, Colo., was arrested in this city, for endeavoring to ship 10 pounds of dynamite to De Lamar, Nev., in her baggage. The girl said that she was going to Nevada to prospect. She was not afraid, either of the hardships or the dangers of the desert. Dressed in male attire, armed with a brace of pistols and equipped with mining requisites and camp paraphernalia, she would go out alone to seek for the yellow metal that would make her wealthy, and in the same time she would realize the romance and adventure that she longed to experience. Such was the young woman's story, as told while in custody here.

After being released from jail here, she expressed the dynamite to De Lamar and proceeded to that town herself. There she told the same story, and was again released. She was, including a number of women. Much interest was shown in the young girl of 16, who alone and unprotected would go into the wilds to seek her fortune. A hold-up of "Cowboy Nell" in De Lamar, there had come to the same town a Pinkerton detective named Hicks. He was in quest of a Montana murderer named in general, and just located and was proceeding to gain the man's confidence, when he also espied another man whom he sought for a similar crime, in the person of one Hughie Monroe. The confidence of Monroe was also gained by the detective. The latter learned of "Cowboy Nell" and of her intended visit to De Lamar, where she was to meet with a hold-up of Hicks, in which "Nell" was also to take part. Upon her arrival the plot was soon carried out. Three places were to be robbed in one night, namely, Nesbitt Bros., Pete Salmensen's and Barvich's. Nesbitt's was tackled first by the trio, who had been joined by Frank Sanford, one of the company's employees.

Hicks had men stationed inside the building and at convenient places on the outside. At 2 o'clock a. m., he and his pals crept up to the second story and intended to be robbed. Upon the shoulders of Hicks, Monroe, unfastened an upper window. A shot rang out, fired from the inside, and Monroe fell back with a bullet in his left hand. The two officers on the outside then put in an appearance. They were captured by "Cowboy Nell," who attempted to draw her pistol. Before she could do so, however, Detective Hicks, who had thrown off his guise of robber, seized and held her fast. She cursed him for his perfidy. Monroe, the girl and the accomplice Sanford, were all taken into custody. The prisoners were taken to Caliente, where they will have a speedy trial. Sanford will doubtless ask for and obtain mercy for complicity in the affair. Monroe is wanted in Montana for killing a man in Madison county in 1891.
