THE EVENING NEWS. PURSUIT OF HAWS! GEORGE Q. CANNON. EDITOR AND PUBLISHER. Several Men Shot!

Wednesday, May 4, 1870 PLEA FOR RELIGIOUS LIBERTY.

There is so great a demand for the speech of Hon. Wm. H. Hooper, our Delegate to Congress, that he has been under the necessity of publishing a second edition, with which he has incorporated the Remonstrance and Resolutious adopted at the general mass meeting in this city on March 81st. This plea for "Beligious Liberty" is creating a sensation. This is apparent from the fact that the reputedly ablest minister in Washington City has atfrom his pulpit before the leading men of the nation. He has only proved, however, that the masterly plea for religious liberty is unanswerable. The discussion of this subject will inevitably accomplish much good. Men's attention will be directed to the evidences for and against this much-abused and misunderstood doctrine, and the collision of ideas will have the effect to liberalize men's views. So long as our opponents confine themselves to polemshould adopt other arguments we have nothing to fear. The principle is true and from God and will stand.

If any of our citizens should wish the their friends in the East, they should send a list of names to Hon. W. H. Hooper, Washington, and he will send price; but it will not be high. It is a document that should be widely circulated. Now is the time to preach and by means of publications. Interest is now awakened, let advantage be taken ofit. Our enemies, are determined to make us famous.

THE DESPERADO CAPTURED

THE Sheriff of Tooele county, accompanied by Messrs. John W. Cooley, Samuel W. Woolley, Riley Judd and several others, arrived in this city early this morning, bringing with them the body of Albert H. Haws, the desperado whose killing of Wm. R. Storey, Deputy United States Marshal for this Territory, we described in our yesterday's issue. The party was met at Black Rock last night by Heber P. Kimball and Wm. C. Rydalch, Esqrs., who were carrying Dr's W. F. Anderson and Heber J. Richards to Grantsville to render surgical aid to the men who were wounded in the attempt to captempted to controvert its arguments ture Haws. Bro. Kimball returned with the party to the city; and it is from the gentlemen composing that party that we have obtained the particulars of the attempt to capture this desperate murderer.

After the body of Storey had been cared for-Mr. Carrigan preferring to lay him out before starting in pursuit of Haws-he, accompanied by Alma H. Hale, Riley Judd and others followed on his trail. Bro. Hale afterwards separated from the others and rode to ics' we shall be pleased; but if they Tooele City to inform the Sheriff of the county, Thomas Tanner, of the occurrence, and to raise a posse of men to join in the search. The Sheriff, Bro. Hale and the posse left Tooele and spent the "Plea for Religious Liberty" sent to time, until the news of the killing of Haws reached them, in trying to get some clue to his whereabouts. Mr. Carrigan and those with him prosecuted them to them. We do not know the the search in the direction in which they started; he, we believe, spent the night of Monday at Stockton, and Riley Judd and some others of the party at get our principles : before the people Rush Valley. We understand that O. Porter Rockwell was also out with a party of men in the direction of Simpson's Springs, it being thought that Haws might have gone in that direction.

It appears that after Haws rode off from Grantsville armed with two revolvers of his own, the revolver he had snatched from Mr. Carrigan's hand, and the one he had taken sight of him, and fired, hitting him in the from his murdered victim, Mr. Storey, side. Haws fired in all four shots; but his Territory of Utab, at about 11 e'clock a. m., he doubled on his own track and came back on to South Willow Creek, a dis- ley's bullet had spoiled his aim. He laid awake all night; but Haws, he said, slept as soundly as an innocent, tired man might be supposed to do. Before night-fall Haws had met a herd boy, and gave him a message to give to further back, and which was loose when his wife, for her to meet him half-way the pistol hung, as it naturally would between the house where he thought of stopping and Grantsville. He told the boy that if he betrayed him he would kill him. The boy met a son of Haws' wife, and delivered the message to him which had been sent to his mother. The stepson afterwards told his brother that his mother was going to meet Haws up the canon, and the brother, unwilling to keep the murderer's secret, told what he had heard. The constable immediately placed a posse of men on guard around Haws' house, to prevent all communication, and raised another posse on horseback and sent up resided there, he was shunned by the citithe cafion, to the house where it was zens, who viewed him as a man capable of supposed he had stopped for the night, committing any deed, however desperate, When it was light enough to discern that might suit his purpose. But they did not dare to make a demonstration against the house, as it contained a woman and several children, whose lives would be imperilled by an attack; and it was well understood that if Haws were captured, and did so. Mr. Storey drew the handit would only be after a hard fight. He happened to look out of the window and saw the men in the distance, and uttered an exclamation that they were after him. Slipping out of the house he succeeded in bringing his horse in front of at the same time, before they had snapped, the door, where he could saddle it without danger-a shrewd contrivance, as P. S. under the circumstances, a messenger was sent to Grantsville. A company of men turned out, and proceeding up the canon they found those who had chased him still on guard. He had not emerged. Bro. John W. Cooley proposed going into the brush and searching for him. This was a hazardous undertaking, but, accompanied by one of the company, rigan: he entered the creek and searched up and down its banks for tracks; but could not find any. By the time he emerged from the creek Captain Samuel W. Woolley and others came up. Brother Cooley urged the searching of the brush. Captain Woolley told the them into the brush; but if they choos- and bring to this city the criminal who is ed to follow they could do so. Bro. Cooley entered the brush at one side of the Judge before issuing his writ. I am the creek, accompanied by Festus extremely anxious that the good people of Sprague and a number of others following up, and Bro. Woolley started in on the other side, accompanied by Emanual Bagley and others. Bro. Cooley examined the bends as he went along, and as he was coming out of one of them towards Bro. Sprague, who was walking in a sort of cow path, they came upon Haws. He must have been aware of their approach some time before they saw him, and was prepared terday morning. Of course it was of no for them. As Sprague was drawing up avail then, as the affair had culminated. his gun, Haws fired his pistol; the ball struck Sprague about two inches and a half below the right nipple, and ranging upwards, came out about an inch and a half above the left nipple. From the position in which he stood he must have been drawing his gun to shoot from his left shoulder, and had his right side towards Haws. He fired his gun, but time that capturing desperadoes is not so the muzzle dropping as he was hit, his bullet fell short of his mark. Cooley and that the citizens of Utah are as willing attempted to fire his gun, but it only anapped, and having nothing better al hand, he commenced firing rocks. I is noticed that Haws' face, as he lies dead at the police office, is swelled as though it had been pounded. This effect is either due to his rolling down the ridge when he left his horse, or to stones thrown by John W. Cooley. When the party on the other side of the creek heard the pistol fire they knew that Haws had shot, for all who entered the bush had guns. Almost simultaneously with his shooting, Emanuel Bagley, who was on the other side of the creek, caught last three were fired at random, for Bag they were too few to effect his capture him know his business; but he objected to this. "Haws was a coward, and he did not want any help to take him, he could take him himself; besides, the inhabitants might sympathize with him and prevent his capture." That it was expected he would call to his aid the Sheriff of Tooele county is evident from the following letter addressed to the Sheriff, which His Excellency, Governor Shaffer, gave to Mr. Car-

EXECUTIVE OFFICE, SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH TER'Y. April 30, 1870.

To the Sheriff of Tooele County, Utah Ter'y the warrant should be put in your hands, charged with a most foul murder, of which there was abundant evidence submitted to this Territory shall not be charged with harboring or in any wise protecting crim-inals of any grade, but most especially murderers who escape from other States or Territories into ours.

Let nothing prevent or deter you in arresting and delivering said Horz to the Sheriff of this county. I am yours most respectfully, J. W. SHAFFER, J. W. SHAFFER, Governor Utah Territory.

The Sheriff, Mr. Thos. Tanner, informs us that he did not see this letter until yes-The Sheriff is confident that Haws could have been captured without difficulty had the Governor's letter been delivered as it should have been; but his opinion is that the fifteen hundred dollars, and the anxiety to "run the case" independent of the citizens here, were the reasons for not honoring the legal authority. Mr. Carrigan is probably satisfied by this easy a business as he thought it would be, to risk their lives in maintaining the supremacy of the laws as even a deputy-sheriff from Nevada. Hereafter he will probably be careful how he attempts to pick Haws.

INQUEST ON THE BODY OF HAWS .- An inquest was held this morning, at the City Hall, on the body of Albert H. Haws, the desperado shot at Grantsville vesterday, and the following verdict was returned by the jury: We, the jury, being duly empanneled and

"For reasons which will be explained," he advertises, "no men will be allowed within 100 yards of the premises." In s card to the ladies he announced, through the columns of the Oshkosh Northwestern, the subjects upon which he wished to lecture to them. His letter is so unique, so like Geo. Francis Train, and so unlike every-body else, that we append it. Knowing the man, our readers can form an idea of the manner in which he will treat these subjects. We may add that he is still the Presidental candidate for 1872.

REVERE HOUSE, OSHKOSH April 27th, 1870.

I am surprised to learn this morning that many of the large audience that so kindly welcomed me to Oshkosh last night, considered my announcement that I would lecture exclusively to women at three o'clock, at McCourt's Hall, was intended as a joke! This note is to say that I was never so much in earnest. I want to talk to the women alone! I want no men round! I want to talk to you on the Laws of Health, as a physician, (without a dip-loma) about the wonderful panaces of the Turkish Bath, which oures all disease.

How Women are enslaved by having every ten dollars wanted dollad out to them by the head of the family!

Why Men can break all the laws, and be respected, while Women are disgraced for what exaits man!

These points foreshadow the important confidential lecture, which will do more to emancipate women than all the books, papers, and lecturers in the country.

THE ADJOURNED CONFERENCE-The

fired by Ethan Barrus breaking his neck. When they rushed in on him they saw a revolver tied to his belt. William Averill seized this to jerk it off; and in doing so the pistol went off, the ball passing through Averill's hand, and coming out of his wrist, two or three inches above the joint, and striking a stranger from Montana, who was at Grantsville to buy cattle, and the manner in which this pistol was fastened revealed the fact that it had been expectation that, if those who attempted to capture him should rush upon him, the first thing they would seize would be his pistol. It was cocked and suspended to the belt by a cord; to the trigger another string was fastened, which was tied to the belt when untouched. It will readily be perceived how dangerous this weapon would be to a person seizing it. The pistol, being cocked, would go off, and, as in the case we describe, in the direction of the person clutching it. The villain was determined to kill as many as he could, and this dead-fall proves that he was an adept at the business and had thoroughly studied all his chances. Haws' character was written in his face. He had the look of a desperado. Apparently a small man, he was powerfully built, and was as active as a cat, and his frame was a mass of bone and muscle. In Grantsville, during the short time he has acter might be expected to consort with. We stated yesterday that Mr. Storey was reading the writ to him when he was shot. We are informed that this was not the case. Mr. Carrigan and he both drew their pistols and presented them at Haws, who was in his shirt sleeves and un armed. He was told to throw up his arms cuffs, and was in the act of fastening them on one of his wrists, when Haws said: "Gentlemen, you have got me; let me get some things before you take me off," or words to that effect, shaking off the irons and then seizing Carrigan's pistol as described yesterday. Mr. Storey fired twice at him before he died. Deputy Sheriff Carrigan's conduct in this dreadful transaction exposes him to the canon, followed by the men. They officer from Nevada coming into a neightried one long range gun upon him; boring Territory, he should have done, we but the ball missed him. - For nearly are morally certain that Haws could have
