We quote from the Chronicle:

"The chief reasons for believing that Oceanica was once a continentare two: First, the existence in a large number of islands of architectural and artistic remains which imply a civilization and not any better. a population far beyond what the is-innuls now present; and second, the fact that everywhere between the 1slands the sea bottom, even at a depth of 2,000 fathoms and over, is found to consist of coral, coral detritus and coral mixed with sand and lava. The goral insect cannot live below 50 or 100 feet beneath the surface of the water. Comparing this fact with the existence of coral at a depth of 2,000 fathoms, Darwin came to the conclusion that the bottom of the sea must have subsided since that coral was deposited. Dana took up the theory, amplified and elaborated it, and it is now generally accepted.

The Mining and Scientific Press, of San Francisco, also treats upon Captain Chardell's lecture, regarding which it 5114
