THE EVENING NEWS.

Tuesday, . . Nov. 10, 1874.

Woman's Worth.

Charge me not with partial praise,
Wilfully and wrongfully,
When I strive the veil to raise,
Faithfully, but modestly,
Under which her virtues shine
With a constancy divine.

Woman, true, is not the same,
Any day and every day;
Like the sun she hides her flame
Properly, effectually.
When she sees that man is blind
To the charms of womankind.

Why cast pearls before the swine
Brutishly and beastily?
Why give ragged beggars wine
Wastefully and foolishly?
Give the wine unto the fair,
Pearls were made to grace her hair.

Woman, too, will have her way,
Coaxingly or threat'ningly;
In her house she'll have the sway,
Wrongfully or rightfully;
When her path is crossed by man
She will scold, for—that she can.

Woman, true, will sometimes buy
Heedlessly and needlessly,
Things on which she sets her eye
Longingly and greedily;
Then all this is but to show
What her husband's purse can do.

Woman, too, will sometimes fret
Peevishly and wrathfully;
In a trifling passion get,
Scolding us most awfully;
But soon as the storm is past,
Bright shines out the sun at last.

But when sickness pales the brow,
Wofully and painfully,
She's a minist'ring angel now,
Lovingly and faithfully;
Closely hovers round his bed,
Gently bathes his aching head.

Virtues, still, will have their sway,
Steadily and constantly,
Hid, 'tis true they sometimes may
Be by old Morality;
But the truth I speak again—
Woman's worth will still remain.

BREVITIES.

In many men impudence takes the place of wit.

A Philadelphin officer who is very fond of a joke got up a jury of cross-eyed men, and it took the Judge some time to decide whether to fine him for contempt of court or to laugh. He concluded to laugh.

A widow who had just lost her husband, was weeping bitterly for the dear departed. A friend tried to console her. "No, no," said the fair mourner, "let me have my cry out; after that I shall not think anything more about it."

A widow who says that she is the homeliest woman in Newport, Ky., advertises for a husband. He must be middle-aged, good-natured, but not beautiful, "as I want to love him all myself."

"What are you going to give me for a Christmas present?" asked a gay damsel of her lover. "I have nothing to give but my humble self," was the reply. "The smallest favors gratefully received," was the response of the lady.

It must indeed be dry in Kansas, if it be true, as a local paper says, that "the suffering catfish lies stranded on the blistering bottom of his late happy home, waving his tail in the crisp breezes as a signal of distress."

An Alsatian woman goes to confess—"Father, I have committed a great sin." "Well!" "I dare not say it; it is too grievous." "Come, come, courage." "I have married a Prussian." "Keep him, my daughter. That's your penance."

An American appeared in the parquette of a London theatre with his coat and trowsers very much torn and disarranged. Some people thought he had been "sitting on the ragged edge of despair," but in reality he had fought with the doorkeeper about leaving his overcoat in the lobby, as is customary.

A bevy of little children were telling their father what they got at school. The eldest — reading, spelling and definitions. "And what kind do you get, my little one?" said the father to a little rosy faced fellow, who was at the time driving a ten-penny nail into the door panel. "Me? Oh, I gets readin,' spellin' and spankins!"

The Rev. Mr. Collyer, who decided not to leave Chicago, says: "I was advised that if I went to New York I should be like a horse drifted down from a carriage steed to an omnibus jade. Just as soon as the New York folks found I didn't suit they would jerk me out, throw me to one side, and let me go to the dogs."

A large number of defeated candidates are about sailing for the headwaters of Salt River, to that mythical haven of rest where so many have already preceded them. There they will meet with many an illustrious individual, who, in the past history, has also been defeated in his political hopes and aspirations. This will be their consolation.—Gold Hill News.
