

IN THE LEGAL REALM

Car Conductor R. M. Mack Taught a Wholesome Lesson.

HE WAS FIRED $20 AND COSTS.

The Parsons Contract Case Again Comes Up—Prothon Court Orders, Etc.

R. M. Mack, a conductor on the Redbird Train railroad, has learned to his cost that he cannot with impunity take "playboy" liberties with his passenger by striking them over the head with a switch when out of temper.

On Sabbath day Alexander Brown, an employee in the station of F. A. Astor, New York, accompanied by four of his acquaintances, took a spinout on the car as far as Fort Douglas instead of going to join the crowd at Salt Lake. They were in a happy mood, and it would appear that on nearing the fort one of the number took out a bottle of whisky. Mack informed them that they must leave the car if they wanted to drink any portion of the contents. They did so and then jumped on again. When the car reached its destination it was suggested that a "prayer" be said in honor of the event. This was done. The passengers agreed to the conduct of the conductor. The number cited Mack, who in a hasty moment seized hold of the conductor's coat and flattered it. Mack said, "You wouldn't hit me with that, would you?" or words to that effect, which expression backed up, answered that he would "soon let him know." During the action in the court he brought down the bar on Brown's head with terrible force, inflicting a long gash from ear to ear, and rendering him unconscious for some time. The injured man was brought to the city and attended by a doctor. He was confined to his house for several days and is still lying around with a bad cold, probably a surgical condition. From the effects of the shock he is also yet suffering.

The conductor claimed that Mr. Brown threatened upon him a most offensive name, but this was denied. Captain Mack came up for hearing in Columbus. McCrory's court this morning, but the defendant pleaded guilty and so saved the trouble of an investigation.

During his testimony Captain H. L. Thompson, Harmonie, told of an accident to himself in this season. Second crop of beans is about ready. Cold nights.
