

THE VENEZUELAN ARBITRATION COMMISSION.

JUST at the present time England has no less than three weighty boundary disputes on her agenda. Of these three, nothing is more important than that over the Amazon boundary, another is the title row with France regarding the New Hebrides, and the last, but not least, is the new well known Venezuelan boundary question, which has been the cause of much trouble over the years of the Anglo-

English boundary dispute. It must be confessed that the negotiations that have been going on for some time have been of a far from satisfactory nature. There have been many interruptions of the negotiations, and the negotiations have been of a far from satisfactory nature. The Venezuelan question has been the cause of much trouble over the years of the Anglo-
