

Mr. Robb, who was examined yesterday, was called to the stand. Witness had told Dole that he believed Okey would kill him for having published the circular. Dole said he was not afraid of Okey, and said he was "healed" (armed) for him.

At eleven o'clock the court took a recess for ten minutes. When the examination was resumed, Judge Morgan, on the part of the defense, asked a continuance of the case until Frank Tredder, another witness, could be brought into court.

The prosecuting attorney wished to know what the defense expected to prove by this witness. To which Judge Morgan answered that it was expected that Okey would be proved by the witness that he had gone into the Post Office to get his mail matter and that Dole had followed shortly afterwards and got his mail. That Okey locked his box and Dole had looked his, and that when they saw each other the latter was seen to make a motion as if to draw a pistol, and that when Mr. Okey shot Dole the witness in question heard something drop on the floor, which he believed to be Dole's pistol.

The prosecution, rather than the case should be adjourned, was willing to admit that Tredder would appear to this court if he were present, and it was there continued. Judge Clinch, though, however, that speakers were generally shorter winded when their stomachs were full than when they were empty, and he adjourned the court for one hour, to allow the lawyers time for dinner.

The Court opened again about two o'clock, when the argument was continued for the prosecution by Judge Hogg, who was followed on the part of the prosecution by Judge Morgan and Joslin. The latter is from Illinois, and is an expert of the sledge hammer school, and he was pounding away most energetically when our reporter left the court to be in time for the press.

In Town.—Hon. Saml. A. Merritt, delegate to Congress from the Territory of Idaho, arrived in the city last evening en route from Washington City. Since the adjournment of Congress he has been visiting friends in Virginia, his native State. We should not wonder if the Colonel, here with the intention of examining the prospects for business in the legal profession, as the rumor has been in circulation that he had this city in view as his future home. Wherever he goes he will have hosts of friends.
