ROLAND FOR HIS OLIVER.

The drive of between fourteen and fifteen miles from San Diego to Tia Juana is a most delightful one. Great orchards of lemon, orange, fig and olive trees can be seen on every hand, surrounding pretty and at times imposing villas and comfortable-looking ranch houses of more modest architecture. On several occasions the obliging driver stopped his team to allow us to alight and pluck green lemons and oranges and ripened figs from the trees, a novel experience to us who dwell in a clime where such semi-tropic funits cannot be grown. While passing a handsome fig orchard the man from Maine turned to our wives, who occupied the rear seat of the carriage, and with a 'way down East grin on his genial face asked: "Do you wimmen realize the fact that we are now passing a counterpart of the first dressmaking establishment the
