HEALTH HINTS, ETC.

COMPILED BY MAC.

Cut out these "Hints" and keep them.

Extract from Dr. Kellogg's book on diphtheria, continued from last Saturday's NEWS:

TO PREVENT DIPHTHERIA.

Importance of Prevention.—It has been well said in reference to disease in general that "prevention is better than cure." There can be no question of the truth of this medical maxim with reference to this disease at least. Its fatality is so great, its infecting poison is so virulent in its character and so tenacious of life, and the results of disease are so serious and often so permanent, even in the mildest case, that it is of the greatest importance that active, energetic, and effective measures should be adopted for its limitation and prevention.

Avoid taking cold.—If diphtheria is prevalent in a neighborhood, parents should exercise the greatest care to keep their children from taking cold. This will not be successfully accomplished by keeping them confined in close rooms, but by keeping the skin active by frequent bathing, and the circulation vigorous and well balanced by proper clothing, warm under-garments, thick shoes and stockings, etc. It is of especial importance that the limbs should be thoroughly clad with warm woolen garments, and that the feet should be kept dry and warm. It is not necessary that shoes or boots should admit water to cause coldness and dampness of the feet. If they are simply wet on the outside, the feet will be chilled by the evaporation, and will often become damp by perspiration, and the person is very liable to contract a cold. Mothers should exercise special care for their children's feet if they wish them to avoid taking cold. Overshoes should be worn on cold, damp days, but should be removed as soon as the child enters the house. The feet are greatly injured by the constant wearing of rubber or other impervious covering.

Ventilation.—A person suffering with diphtheria constantly sends out with his breath volumes of the disease-producing organisms which are preying upon his system. Unless the air in the sick room is constantly renewed, the whole atmosphere soon becomes saturated with contagious matter, and any one coming into the room is placed under the most favorable conditions possible for becoming infected. By thorough and constant ventilation the germs are carried away as rapidly as they are generated, and thus the danger of contagion is greatly lessened.

Preventive Treatment.—In the first place, it is always important that the excretory organs, especially the liver and the skin, should be kept active by frequent bathing and abundant exercise in the open air. But the especially important measure of treatment to be adopted is of a local character, consisting of disinfection of the mouth. As before observed, it is through the air-passages that infection most frequently occurs. There are many well-known agents which will destroy the germs of diphtheria as well as other classes of germs, some of which may be utilized in treatment. Permanganate of potash and chlorine are especially useful for this purpose. Both of these substances may be used to great advantage as gargles by those who are exposed to diphtheria. The permanganate dissolves very readily in water, and should be used in a solution sufficiently strong to have a deep purple color. A strong solution of common salt is good. The best preparation is a solution of chlorinated soda, in the proportion of one part of the solution, as found at the drug stores, to two or three of water, according to the strength of the solution. But gargles, to be effective, must be employed thoroughly and frequently. Children who cannot use the gargle successfully should should have it applied with a swab or an atomizer.

RULES FOR RESTRICTING AND PREVENTING DIPHTHERIA.

The following are condensed from a set of rules prepared by the Michigan State Board of Health.

1. Every person known to be sick with this disease should be promptly and effectually isolated from the public; one or two persons only should take the entire charge of the patient and should be restricted in their intercourse with other persons.

2. The room in which one sick with diphtheria is placed should previously be cleared of all needless clothing, carpets, drapery, and other materials likely to harbor the poison of the disease. This room should constantly receive a liberal supply of fresh air, without currents or drafts directly upon the patient. It will be well also to have the sun shine directly into the room.

3. The discharges from the throat, nose and mouth are extremely liable to communicate the disease, and should be received on soft rags or pieces of cloth which should immediately be burned.

4. The discharges from the kidneys and bowels are also dangerous, and should be passed on old clothes and burned, or into vessels kept thoroughly disinfected by nitrate of lead, chloride of zinc, or sulphate of iron (copperas), and then be buried at least 100 feet distant from any well.

Copperas, dissolved in as little hot water as will dissolve it, is a good disinfectant for this purpose.

5. Nurses and attendants should be required to keep themselves and their patients as clean as possible—their own hands should frequently be washed and disinfected by chlorinated soda.

6. Soiled bed and body linen should at once be placed in boiling water, or in water containing chlorinated soda, chlorinated lime, or solution of chloride of zinc.

7. All persons recovering from diphtheria should be considered dangerous, and therefore no such person should be permitted to associate with others or to attend school, church, or any public assembly, until in the judgment of a careful and intelligent physician he can do so without endangering others.

8. The body of a person who has died of diphtheria should, as early as practicable, be placed in the coffin, with disinfectants; and the coffin should then be tightly closed. Afterward, the body should not be exposed to view except through glass.

9. No public funeral should be held at a house in which there is a case of diphtheria, nor in which a death from diphtheria has recently occurred. No children at least, and it would be better in most cases that few adults, should attend such a funeral.

The room in which there has been a case of diphtheria, whether fatal or not, should, with all its contents, be thoroughly disinfected by exposure for several hours to strong fumes of chlorine gas, or of burning sulpher, and then, if possible, it should, for several days be exposed to currents of fresh air.

To disinfect an ordinary room with chlorine gas: Having tightly closed all the openings of the room, place it in an open, earthen dish containing four ounces of peroxide of manganese. Pour on this one pound of strong muriatic acid, being careful not to breathe the fumes. When certain that continuous evolution of chlorine is taking place, leave the room and close the door.

To generate sulphurous acid gas: put live coals on top of ashes in a metallic pan, and place on the coal sulphur in powder or fragments.

A convenient way is to place the coals and sulphur on a heated stove plate or cover turned bottom upward in a pan half filled with ashes. To disinfect 100 cubic feet of air requires the thorough burning of about one and one-half ounces of sulphur.

11. After a death or recovery from diphtheria, the clothing, bedding, carpets, mats and other cloths which have been exposed to the contagion of the disease, should either be burned, exposed to superheated steam, to a degree of dry heat equal to 240 deg. F., or be thouroughly boiled.

The foregoing methods of disinfection are applicable in all contagious diseases.

12. Avoid the special contagion of the diseases.

13. Beware of crowded assemblies in ill ventilated rooms.

All influences which depress the vital powers, and vitiate the fluids of the body, tend to promote the development and spread of this disease. Among these influences, perhaps the most common and powerful are impure air and impure water. Because of this, and as a means of lessening the danger of contracting almost all other diseases, the following precautions should always be taken, but more particularly during the prevalence of any such disease as this.

14. The grounds under and around the house should be well drained.

15. No vegetable or animal matter should be allowed to decompose on the surface of the ground near the house.

16. If any slaughter-house, rendering establishment or other source of foul odors, contaminate the air which you and your children daily breathe, take immediate measures, through your local board of health or health officer to have such nuisance abated.

17. Your own privy, especially, should at all times be thoroughly disinfected, by dry earth, coal ashes, or copperas water; and the receptacle should be so constructed as to be water-tight and to be tightly covered when removed to be emptied, as it should be often enough to prevent the air about it from becoming offensive, and in cold weather so far as possible.

18. Your whole house, and especially its sleeping-rooms, should be well ventilated.

19. Your cellar should be dry and well ventilated; it should frequently be whitewashed, and always kept clear of decomposing vegetable or other substances.

20. No cesspool should be allowed near the house. If there be one, it should either be removed or be thoroughly and frequently disinfected with sulphate of iron (copperas).

21. Your house drains should be looked to with scrupulous care, to see that they are well trapped, kept clear, and ventilated into the open air.

22. Your house should not have uninterrupted connection with a sewer. Be sure that the waste-pipes do not permit the entrance of sewer gas into the house, but that they enter the sewer through an open-air space, or at least through a space freely ventilated to the open air.

23. Be sure that your drinking water is not contaminated by surface drainage, nor by leakage from the drain, gas pipes, sewer, cesspool, or vault.

The "Health Hints" in next Saturday's News will give the proper treatment of diphtheria, as contained in Dr. Kellogg's book.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Oct. 16th, 1886.

Editor Deseret News:

The subject of this obituary, Priddy Meeks, was born in Greenville district, South Carolina, Aug. 29th, A. D. 1795. In March 1815 he married Mary Bartlett by whom he had four children. She died in 1824 in Spencer Co., Va. He next married Sarah Mahurin Smith in Grayson Co., Ky. She bore him five children. On Nov. 13th, 1856, he married Mary Jane McCleeve in Salt Lake City, who has born him ten children, eight of whom are living. Brother Meeks received the Gospel in 1840 in Illinois, and in 1842 moved to Nauvoo. He left there with the Saints and reached Salt Lake Valley Oct. 1st, 1847. In 1851, volunteers were called for to strengthen the southern settlements of the Territory. Brother Meeks volunteered, and lived in Parowan, Iron County, for ten years, afterwards in Harrisburg. In 1876 he moved to Orderville, Kane County, and joined the United Order. Brother Meeks bore a faithful testimony to the truth of the latter-day work, and exhorted his children to be firm and steadfast in the cause of God. He was a strict observer of the Word of Wisdom, and practiced medicine somewhat after the "Thompsonian" school. He was a faithful Latter-day Saint, and departed this life at his residence in Orderville, October 7th, 1886, at the ripe age of 91 years, leaving two wives and a numerous posterity to mourn his departure.
