Couldn't help it. "On the theatrical road?" But Fitz passed this up also. Fitz was evidently in good humor. "After walking awhile." he went on, "I would start running as fast as i could. If I met a wagon going at any rate of speed or a troiley car I hung on to the tail end and ran with it." "But about the-" "When I had a match on I worked barder than most fighters ever did to he at my best. I always knew I had a duty to perform to the public, and when the champion went into the ring every one in the country was fully aware of the fact that they were going to see a battle that gave them a run for their money and was always on the square. I know there have been boxers who neglected proper training and so cheated those who paid their good money to see them work, and I know that there are others who cheated worse than that becauge they of gamblers could make money from the honest public by betting on the result. But no one can say I ever did this."

on the result. But no one can say 1 ever did this." Fitz paused a moment for breath, and I took the opportunity to try and get him on the main track. "What I would like to know--" "No one ever fought so many battles as I participated in. While I am not as old as some would make me out. I have been longer in the ring that any fighter now prominently before the public. Counting my last go with O'Brien, I have fought 347 times. My first fight occurred when I was nothing but a kid." "You're only a kid now, aren't you?" "To the shop. One big fellow called me 'red head. I mildly toid him I might have a red head, but that was my funeral and not his. Then he punched me in the nose. I didn't know much about fighting then, but my dander was up and I salled into him. I licked him good."

pitcher the yhad ever seen on the pro-fessional diamond, says the New York Sun. "It is a toss-up between Rusie and Mathewson." said Davis. "Both have excelled all other boxmen. I have never batted against Matty in a game, but I have met his curves in practise, and I want to say that he has just as good control of the ball as Rusie. Maity's most effective ball is a straight drop, but his speed is a great factor as well as a wonderfully controlled slow ball. "He uses fils forearm and elbow and winds up in such a matner that a bats-man is sure to be puzzled. Rusle, on the other hand, depended on an out drop, which he controlled with remarkable skill, in addition to his fast ball; but he had very little preliminary motion and used his shoulder almost exclusively. Rusle possibly had the better physione-but in head work and vitality he never outclassed Mathewson's curves and the discussion in the other and that he had formed the opinion some time ago that Rusie. In his prime, was the best twirler that ever stepped into the bost. "His curves, speed and control were he best assortment I ever pooked at." declared Griff. "and no pitcher has ever approached him in class since he made his record in the baseball world."
