where I write, there probably exists a greater quantity of iron than can be found in any locality of one hundred times its dimensions. The quantity cannot be estimated because of its unlimited extent, any more than you can estimate the given number of pounds in one of the loftlest peaks of the Wasatch range, or the aggregate weight of one of its broadest canyons; for here we find valleys of iron, hills of iron, mountains of iron. The float rock of the country is simply iron in an almost unadulterated condition. On the 16th of September, at the Red Cloud Agency, Neb., the grand council between the U. S. commissioners and the Siour cand other Indians for the cession of the Black Hills country by the Jatter to the former commenced. On the arrival of the commissioners at the ground appointed for the council to be held, no Indians were visible, but by the time the council tent was exected several hundred were present, some of them not very anxious to accelerate the council business.

Senator Allison, in a speech, in troduced the business of the council, by declaring that it was the desire of the government to "lease" the Black Hills country and purchase a part of the Big Horn country. This announcement caused that that part of the explanation which suggested that after the whites had dug all the gold and all other minerals from the Black Hills country, it should be returned to the Indians to dispose of as they chase a part of the Big Horn country. This announcement caused the Indians to laugh consumedly a most infectious laugh, especially at that part of the explanation which suggested that after the swittes had dug all the gold and all other minerals from the Black Hills other minerals from the Black Hills country, it should be returned to the Indians to dispose of as they chose.

He evidently thought, if land could be leased, mules could, and for the sole benefit of the lesses.

The Indians are modest in their demands as to the purchasing price of the Black Hills country. The figures they ask run from $5,000,000 to $50,000,000. Either of those amounts ought to do them good when they get it. They evidently have the idea that for the white man to lease the country would be tantamount to his stealing it.
