DINNER DRESS OF SATIN.

Chaudron colored satin of the liberty genre is the material arranged so artistically in this modified directoire toilette. So lightweight and soft is the satin that the designer has used it in the development of the long shirred mousetailor sleeve, a treatment quite as unusual as it is attractive. The skirt has a tunic drapery opening on the side and forming an apron effect at the back. Hand embroideries of chaudron color combine with soutache to elaborate the surplice bodice. Chemise white net is embroidered with white silk in Greek key design.

COATED COSTUME OF BLACK CLOTH AND SATIN.

It is the fancy of Dame Fashion this year to combine two very beautiful materials of the same tone in a costume. This is especially true of garments of the dresser type, coated reception, midweek and luncheon toilettes. Where satin and lustrous broadcloth are the fabrics employed, which is frequently the case, the cloth is used in the making of the skirt and the satin in the coat. Sometimes the skirt is trimmed with the satin, as in this instance, the center-front panel being braided with black soutache. The coat is a cutaway design, with waistcoat of white embroidery, long, rather small sleeves and neckline which draws the embroidered inescapable collar snugly about the throat. Coat edges and sleeves are embellished with soutache embroideries in black. Large black hat shows the new shower pompon of ostrich.
