THE CRITIC AND THE PLAY.

The art which offers the greatest difficulties to the critic is undoubtedly that of the acted drama, for the rapidity of its movement interferes with contemplation, which is the very essence of criticism, and by its personal influences, a complete impartiality is rendered, if not impossible, very hard to attain. This is one of the many misfortunes attached to the actor's calling. However just a censure may be, it is easy for him to set down personal animosity as its immediate cause.

To any art which brings the artist in person before the public this may, within certain limitations, be true, but it is less true of the singer than of the actor, because the rules of the singer's art are more definite; there is more in it that a critic can touch with certainty; there is more of positive science.

But in default of science, there are still definite intentions to be fulfilled by the artist failing short of which he misses his aim; and criticism is just if it resolutely rejects the incongruous. Certain anomalies are palpable to the commonest perception. It is at once evident that Antinous must not be represented by a humpback, or Helen by a dowdy; but it is the business of the critic to sift more fully, and to detect the less palpable unfitness of things; it is for him to consider whether the poetry and the poet's interpreter make a complete amalgamation; whether the separate scenes make a perfect whole, and whether that whole distinctly develops the poet's idea. Such siftings and refinements require time, even for the best qualified judges, and no representation of one night will suffice for them; therefore the fashion prevalent at the present day of giving incessant repetitions of one play (damazing though it undoubtedly is in many ways both to audiences and actors) has its use, for it corrects hasty judgments, and affords the artist fair opportunities of correcting his faults.

But whatever the advantages the profession of the stage may have gained in our time, the actor's art is forever imperfect as compared with that of the painter and the composer of music, because he is deprived of the highest hope—the judgment of posterity upon his work. It is not true, however, to say that his name is heard no more; the fact is that his fame survives that of many greater men. Of the multitude familiar with the name of Garrick and with the leading incidents in his career, how few can say who was prime minister in his time! What is true of him is also true of the singer; his name is long sounded, but it is only a name; all the rest is vague: we do not positively know whether dramatic art has advanced from generation to generation; whether it was better in the time of Garrick or of Roscius, in that of Le Kain or Baron. We cannot assert that the foremost singers of today surpass those of two centuries ago, but we do with certainty know the advance of the music they have to interpret; we do know that rich harmonies, wonderful and beautiful in their orchestration, complicated in development, majestic in movement, great in science and great in passion, surround the operatic singer of the present age; and surely it is true that Wagner exalted the position of the vocalists when in seeming to sink their individual importance he made them parts of a vast whole, to the influence and duration of which no limit can be assigned.—Juliet Pollock, in Woman's World for May.

The Boy Knew How.

A mother on Madison Avenue lately requested her daughter, who is just approaching womanhood, to give her beau a hint that she must not sit up later than 10 o'clock. This the girl was reluctant to do, but her little brother threatened that unless she did he would open the parlor door and announce the maternal edict. The sister supposed she had put a quietus upon her brother by reminding him of his playing hookey and forging his mother's name to excuses from school to go skating, not to mention the little riding whip in his mamma kept in her room. All this, however, was not enough to keep the youth from getting even with Sis' beau for not giving him anything at Christmas. The other evening he got an alarm clock with a bell as loud as the gong on the Brooklyn bridge bob, and placed it under the sofa where his sister and her betrothed were to do their spooning. The hands were pointed at 10. The unsuspecting girl heard the tick but took it to be her lover's Waterbury. He was just tickling her ear with a yarn about his horse his papa was going to buy, when the gong sounded. There was a pause—and then, as though understanding the meaning, he grabbed his hat and never stopped running until he struck the door stoop, when he flew. The boy had iced the steps. The little brother now takes a cushion to school with him.—Albany Journal.

Quinine a Much Abused Drug.

"What drug has the largest sale of any in this country?" repeated a wholesale drug dealer in response to a reporter's inquiry. "Quinine without any question. It seems to have been provided as the great specific of nature. Even the physician who over and over again has witnessed its mastery it is little less than miraculous how the shaking ague will yield to its control unless there are special complications, or unless a habit of malarial subjection has been established. It has even extended its domain far beyond this. In other forms of fever and in certain conditions of innervation or want of general tonicity, it is largely available, although needing to be used with discernment. There probably never was a time in which the use of some form of Peruvian bark, under the name of cinchona, quinine, etc., has been so extensive as at present."

"Is it not used to excess?"

"Undoubtedly, and surely it should not be used at random, and the medical adviser may need often to be consulted as to indications and contra-indications for its use. But it can safely be said that it is less abused than most medicines, and that we may easily rank it among the most valuable of American discoveries. While there is no such danger of acquiring a quinine habit as a morphine habit, the abuse of the drug is not uncommon."—New York Mail and Express.

Lowell's Literary Career.

James Russell Lowell, born in 1819, on the same date of the same month as the immortal Peter Parley was, was the youngest of five children. He was the son of a clergyman—is that not the rule with our great New England authors? Emerson's father was a clergyman; so was Dr. Holmes', and Longfellow's, and several others'. Histmother (nee Harriet Spence) was well versed in several languages and admired poetry and read books extensively. Hence, no doubt, Lowell's inheritance of a literary taste. He graduated at college, studied law, and finally drifted into authorship. His first success was the "Bigelow Papers," in 1848. Since, he has given the reading world, "The Fable for Critics," "My Study Windows," "Among My Books," "The Cathedral," Under the Willows," and three or four more volumes of poetry and criticism.—St. Louis Magazine.

GOING TO BED.—I must tell you about my little girl going to bed. She doesn't like to go up stairs by herself at 7:30 and leave the lights, the reading and music, but we have a new plan now which works like a charm. She is never so happy as when personating some one beside herself. One night I proposed she should play she was going to a ball. She (in imagination) put on her satin dress, long gloves, slippers and what not and started off with much interest. Auntie was the coachman who took her to the party and she was very ready to go to bed for the sake of getting started. The next night she went to California to visit some little friends. I wrote out a ticket for her to give the conductor, and she took a sleeping car and next morning reported a lovely trip. Every night now she begins about 7 o'clock to know where she had better go. I quite enjoy planning her trips for her and she goes off happy every night.—E. B. H. in Good Housekeeping.

A REASONABLE REQUEST.—"Papa," said a beautiful girl, brightly, "do you know that this is my eighteenth birthday?"

"Why, bless me, so it is!" responded the old man. "It doesn't seem possible that my little girl has grown to be a young lady."

"Well, she has, papa, and I want you to do me a very great favor," and the beautiful girl hid her blushing face upon the old man's shoulder.

"What is it, dear?" he asked fondly. "Please sell Nero."—New York Sun.

MAYOR'S NOTICE.

Of the Assessment of Local Tax for the Extention of Water Mains on E Street.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN THAT the City Council of Salt Lake City will extend the water mains of said city along E Street as follows: Commencing at the intersection of E and Sixth Streets, thence south along E Street, to a point midway between Third and Fourth Streets, unless written objections to said extention, signed by the owners of one-half, in value, of the property so to be affected or benefitted, as shown in the last preceding city assessment roll, are filed with the City Recorder on or before Saturday, the ninth day of June, 1888.

SUMMONS.

In the District Court in and for the Third Judicial District of Utah Territory, County of Salt Lake.

Mary Bruce Anderson, Plaintiff, vs. Scott Anderson, Defendant.

The people of the Territory of Utah, send greeting:

To Scott Anderson, Defendant,

YOU ARE HEREBY REQUIRED TO appear in an action brought against you by the above named plaintiff in the District Court of the Third Judicial District of the Territory of Utah, and to answer the complaint filed therein within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this summons—if served within this county; or, if served out of this county, but in this district, within twenty days; otherwise within forty days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said complaint.

The said action is brought to have a decree of this court dissolving the bonds of matrimony existing between the plaintiff and defendant, and divorcing the parties and for costs of suit. The above relief is prayed upon the ground that ever since the month of August, 1884, the defendant has continuously deserted and abandoned plaintiff and lived separate and apart from her, and during said time has neglected to provide plaintiff with the common necessaries of life.

And you are hereby notified, that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded therein.

Witness, the Hon. Charles S. Zane, Judge, and the Seal of the District Court of the Third Judicial District, in and for the Territory of Utah, this 22nd day of May, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty-eight.

[SEAL.] HENRY G. McMILLAN, Clerk.
