

achers, the Bishoprick, the council, his Quorum or the presidency, and in his heart as it and carries it out, that he cuts himself off from the privileges and blessings of the God and Church, and severs from the people of God, for the authority that He has placed in His Church. These men that generally get in their heads, that get in (from beneath) and that are so desirous to guide the and to sit in judgment upon Priesthood. The only safe us to do, as individuals, is so humbly, so righteously faithfully before God, that possess His Spirit to that that we will be able to judge wisely, and discern between truth and error, between right and wrong; and then we will when a decision is rendered that in 99 cases out of a 100 we are in error, and that decision is right; and although at the time not be fully able to feel its justness, yet we are constrained to say that in as there are sixteen against one for me to be "I will gracefully and submit." The pith of the church, the Lord has established church, organized His Priesthood conferred authority upon individuals, councils and so, and it is the duty of the God to live so that they know that these are acceptable men. If we begin to cut off and that one, and set their side, we may just as well set God himself aside, and as no right to dictate, unless fully repent. Amen.

OUR OWN RIGHTS AND THE RIGHTS OF OTHERS.

"Herbert Spencer on the Ameri- cans" is a thoughtful work. Among many other wise sayings of this noted sociologist is the following: "The fact is, that free institutions can be properly worked only by men each of whom is jealous of his own rights, and sympathetically jealous of the rights of others." One can readily discern a great truth in the foregoing statement.

Another great man, one of Ameri- ca's greatest statesmen, said: "Eter- nal vigilance is the price of liberty." We need not say, it is not intended that this vigilance is to be wholly absorbed in watching our foreign foes, but that a portion of it must be directed to the foes within who frequently are more dangerous than the foes without. "We have learned by sad experience that it is the dis- position of all men as soon as they get in possession of a little authority as they suppose, to begin to exercise unrighteous dominion over their fel- lowmen." And that "man, clothed with a little brief authority, plays such fantastic tricks before high heaven, as makes the angels weep."

If this "unrighteous dominion" be submitted to even in the smallest degree, it will increase until eventu- ally it will sweep away the safe- guards of liberty, and engulf man- kind in the terrible vortex of op- pression and slavery.

The people who live on either bank of the Lower Mississippi guard well the levees which keep that majestic stream in its proper chan- nel, knowing by sad experience that if they neglect it, their farms, homes, and the whole country in that region would be inundated. They are aware if the waters are permitted to wash over the levees here and there, no matter how in- significant the stream, their lives and property are in danger; for the little waves as they break over the bank, make their minute channels deeper and wider; each minute the volume of water escaping increases until a crevasse is made of sufficient width and depth to allow a stream to pass through which a whole army cannot stop; with a rush and a roar it is upon the unsuspecting inhabit- ants with a force that is irresistible, and which carries death and disas- ter as far as it reaches.

Those who desire to continue the enjoyment of liberty will do well to learn a lesson from the action of the people in the section of country named. "The fact is, free institu- tions can be properly worked only by men, each of whom is jealous of his own rights." Let free men resist every attempt to deprive them of their inalienable and vested rights, however insignificant the right may be (if any right is insigni- ficant) against which a blow is aimed. Regard the encroachment like the inhabitants of New Orleans do the tiny stream which breaks over the levee—stop it. Raise the embankment higher. Make it stronger; for the little stream break- ing over the levee is indicative of dan- ger. So also when those in author- ity go beyond what is described in the Constitution as the bounds of their authority it is dangerous to the liberties of the citizen, and it should not be quietly submitted to. The right which tyranny assails is fre- quently regarded by some as insigni- ficant of itself, but the right to deprive us of our liberties is the question invariably involved. As some of the statesmen of Revolu- tionary times said: "The question as to whether America can pay the tax sought to be levied upon her by the parent government is not to be considered. America can pay the amount a hundred fold; but we are contending about the principle which this question involves, which is, "Has the parent govern- ment a right to tax us when we have no representation in that body which levies the tax?" Such is the case to-day and ever will be. The amount in dollars and cents the in- jury would amount to may be small indeed, but however insignificant the amount when thus counted, it will always involve the question of the right to invade our liberties. If the people become indifferent to the invasions of tyranny upon their rights, they will quickly learn their indifference has bartered away their liberties, and that they have come short of attaining the greatest glory a free people can boast, viz.: to transmit their freedom to their children.

Moreover, it is not enough that they are merely jealous of their own rights, but they must also be sym- pathetically zealous of the rights of others. If men would make their own freedom secure, they must in- sist on all men having their liberty sacredly regarded, and totally free from the unwholesome hand of op- pression. No man in our govern- ment can say: "It matters not to me if the rights of others are assailed, so long as I am not interfered with"—and what is true of the in- dividual is also true of the State.

Our liberties are so closely inter- woven that you cannot strike down the personal liberty of a single in- dividual, be he ever so lowly, but you endanger the freedom of the whole body politic.

It was this jealous regard for the rights of others that united the thir- teen original colonies of America, and enabled them to successfully resist the efforts of the British min- istry to fasten a yoke of bondage up- on their necks.

It works upon this principle: If one man's rights can be wrested from him without due process of law—by an act of oppression, then there is not a man in the common- wealth but can be treated in the same way; hence it is an imperative duty that we owe to ourselves, to the brave men who died in defense of our liberties, to posterity and to God, that we be scrupulously jeal- ous of our own rights, and sympa- thetically jealous of the rights of others; "neither," as Mr. Spencer says, "aggressing on our neighbors in small things or great, nor tolerat- ing aggression on them by others."

No people in the world are better able to judge of the truth of the foregoing propositions than the peo- ple inhabiting our Territory; their rights and liberties have been plotted against by formidable foes. Many of our best and most patriotic citizens have been punished, not by due process of law—not after being tried by a jury of their peers, but punished by legislative enactment which barred them from occupying positions of profit, honor, trust or emolument; and to be deprived of these rights Judge Field of the Supreme Court claimed was punish- ment—it is needless to add that such punishment inflicted by a legislative enactment is a bill of at- tainder.

These efforts to unlawfully wrest from men their rights have, and we trust will continue, to elicit con- demnation from the people upon whom the measure is sought to be enforced. Were it otherwise the people of Utah would be unworthy of the free institutions for which many of their forefathers suffered so much.

Let every unwarranted interfere- ence with the rights of the people be manfully and lawfully resisted, for this question is far-reaching in its results. If our rights can be trampled upon with impunity, then nobodys' rights are secure in our whole land. Let statesmen and philosophers, in all the nation recog- nize this fact: Our free institutions can only be preserved by their being jealous of their own rights, and sympathetically jealous of the rights of others.

All statesmen do recognize this great truth, and all patriots will con- tend—not only for their own rights, but also for the rights of all men in- dependent of creed, sect, color, or party.
