The Philadelphia Convention—Colfax Losing—Wilson Gaining—Grant in Favor.

PHILADELPHIA, 5.—The National Republican Convention was called to order shortly after twelve o'clock, every State and Territory fully represented; Morton McMichael, temporary chairman. Three temporary secretaries and the usual committees were appointed. The nominations will be made to-morrow.

Noon.—The day opens cloudy and cold with the appearance of rain. There was a great crowd last night, increased this morning by the arrival of several clubs from adjacent places. The Vice President is still the exciting and absorbing question. Wilson's friends are greatly encouraged, and say they feel confident of success. It is thought there will be little delay in the organization of the convention, and that an adjournment until to-morrow will be had, though there are those who believe the convention will conclude its labors to-day.

A double-leaded editorial in Forney's Press this morning, on the situation in Pennsylvania, excites great interest. The article, in effect, says the present State nominations will inevitably lose the State to the Republicans in October, and renders doubtful the success of Grant in November. The article also fiercely attacks Senator Cameron, and says the difference has been caused by his personal rule, which, seeking to elect delegates to the National Convention by giving votes to a candidate whose merit is that he is a son of the head despotism.

Long before the hour of twelve, immense crowds gathered in and around the Academy of Music, where the convention meets. As the State delegates arrived at the Hall, a rapid succession of loud cheers greeted them by the throngs of spectators, who crowded the Hall. Each man carried a banner, bearing the motto of their State. The Academy presented a gorgeous spectacle. The interior decorations were of unsurpassed magnificence and all the arrangements were most complete.

Wilson has been gaining all morning for the Vice Presidency, and there is every indication that he will be the successful man. Ohio now stands 34 for Wilson, 14 for Colfax. Pennsylvania has decided to oppose Colfax and it is now thought he cannot possibly be elected.

Shortly after 12 o'clock the convention was called to order by ex-governor Claflin, in a brief speech, referring to the character of the convention and the objects of its meeting, and predicting a triumph for the party it represents, in spite of unexpected defections, over all combinations however skilfully planned, because in its success are centred the best interests and highest hopes of the country. After prayer by the Rev. Alex. Reed, of Philadelphia, governor Claflin nominated Morton McMichael for temporary chairman, and four temporary secretaries were appointed.

McMichael, in taking the chair, made brief speech returning thanks for the honor conferred, especially as it gave him the occasion to welcome the delegates to the State and city. He referred to the rapid growth of the country and the political progress which had brought to the convention not only new States and Territories, but new races, new at least in the possession of political rights and civil functions, and soon to be endowed with all the attributes of equality. Referring to the purpose of the convention, he said the malcontents who recently met in Cincinnati were without a consistency. The Democrats, soon to meet in Baltimore, were without principle. Unlike the first, this convention was the exponent of a great national organization; unlike the last, its object was to preserve, not destroy. In reference to the objects of the convention, he said the selection of the Presidential candidate was a foregone conclusion; that question the people had decided in advance of the convention, which only had to put their will into proper shape, by formally nominating Grant, which would not only be done without demur, without debate, without dissent, but under such auspices as would secure a complete and abundant ratification at the polls. Referring to the persistent abuse of Grant, the calumnies that had been heaped upon him, the disgraceful slanders circulated against him, he declared he this morning, enjoyed more of the confidence of his countrymen, was believed by them to be an honester, truer, better man than any of his detractors. The people knew his administration had been wise, faithful and honest, and they would stand by and defend both at the polls. He referred briefly to the contest for the vice-President and to the platform, saying that whatever the final result of the former, all would feel they had been successful, and the latter would undoubtedly contain the widest recognition of human freedom and the clearest affirmation of the duty of the government to the laboring classes, wherever and however employed, in town or country; and with such a platform, and such candidates, he predicted the party would go on conquering and to conquer.

After a temporary organization was effected, calls were made for Gerrit Smith, Nye and Morton, each of whom addressed the convention, briefly eulogizing the Republican party, President Grant and the acts of his administration, and predicted an overwhelming triumph in November. Every allusion to Grant in the speeches were tremendously applauded, and the most intense enthusiasm was evinced.

Committees on credentials, permanent organizations, rules and resolutions were then appointed. The committee on resolutions was Governor Hawley of Connecticut; J. H. Whiffington, of California; Herman Rostor, of Illinois; Jamas Speed of Kentucky; W.A. Howard, of Michigan; L. A. Head, of Nevada; Governor Hays, of Ohio: H. R. Kincaid, of Oregon, D. W. Scotfield of Pennsylvania; D.B. Elliott, of Colorado; S. C. B. Schafer, of Colerado, and I. F. Cook, of Idaho. After the committee on permanent organizations retired for consultation, brief speeches were made by ex-governor Oglesby, of Illinois; ex-governor Orr, of South Carolina, and others. W. H. Grey, colored delegate from Arkansas, addressed the convention in a well delivered and forcible speech, pledging the entire colored vote of the South for Grant. The speakers were all enthusiastic in their expressions of confidence in Grant, and in his ability to sweep the entire country next fall. General Albright, chairman of the committee on organization, reported the name of Thomas Settles, of North Carolina, for permanent president. Settles, on taking the chair, made a few remarks, and the convention then adjourned till 10 a.m. of the 6th.

The Philadelphia delegation held a caucus this morning, and resolved to support Wilson for Vice President. Wilson's Friends now claim 420 delegates. Illinois will give Colfax 16, and Wilson 26; Ohio will give Wilson 30, and Colfax 14. The platform will be reported and the nominations made to-morrow.

Gov. Pierrpont, of West Virginia, has seceded from the delegation from that State, and in a speech declared his preference for Greeley.

Unfounded Report—Incendiarism—Advanced Wages.

SAN FRANCISCO, 5.—The report of the murder of Captain A. D. Piper, in Batavia, and the captivity of his wife by savages, is shown to be unfounded, by a lengthy letter recently received from him.

VISALIA, 5.—About 2 o'clock this morning the roof of the Fulton market, near the business block, was in flames, supposed to be the result of incendiarism, as no fire has been used for months in the building. The finest business block in the city is destroyed. Loss, about $15,000.

HAMILTON, White Pine, 5.—Three or four of the principal mining companies of Treasure Hill have acceded to the demand of the miners, and are content to pay all skilled miners four dollars per day. It is reported that the McMahon mine, near Shillburn, has been sold to a San Francisco company for $30,000.

Minister DeLong arrived here to-day.
