J. Adam Bede, representative from the Eighth Minnesota district, is now recognized as the humorist of congress. What is more, he won his reputation by his maiden speech. Mr. Bede is forty-eight years of age, and if his fellow members had been wise they would have been on guard after consulting his biographical sketch in the Congressional Directory. Therein Mr. Bede confesses that he has been in turn printer, schoolteacher, reporter and married man. He also mentions that he voted for Cleveland in 1888 and 1892, but supported the Republicans in 1896, 1898 and 1900. He then naively says that he "decided to go to congress as a Republican," which he did.

MARITAL BLISS AND TALK.

In discussing matrimonial troubles a New York attorney, employed in many divorce suits, declared that he believed there were between 500 and a 1,000 nomes in that city "where absolute silence reigned between husband and wife.

Of course, the New York lawyer prob-ably knows what he is talking about, but most people will be inclined to be-lieve that his estimate is entirely too low-incredible as this may seem in connection with a lawyer's statement. What has all this to do with matri-monial infelicity? Must it be understood that silence in a home means domestic discord? I such to a fact that meat if an discord? Isn't it a fact that most "fam-ily jars" may be traced to excessive conversational activity on the part of the wife or husband, or both? Isn't he a wise man who knows enough to re-treat into the cyclone cellar of silence when he sees the storm coming? And yet this New York lawyer pretends to see a relation between silence and domestic infelicity. Of course, many an amiable, industrious, long distance talker gets out of patience with her husband because he closes up like a claim when she chides him for his dere-lictions and his grievous faults. Silence is consent. He knows he is guilty and takes refuge in silence.

It must also be remembered that sllence with many means contentment. It ans mental repose and tranquility. Why assume that unwillingness to par-ticipate in strenuous conversation is a sign of domestic unhappiness?-Chicago Record-herald.
