the ovils that many have failed to see yet, but which all must finally see.

"May the Democrats who assembled at the hanquet, be strengthened for the work that lies before this generation—the work of bringing the government more completely under the control of the whole people."

Champ Clark's letter follows in part:

"It always gives me pleasure to make a speech about Thomas Jefferson anywhere of at any time. In fact my wife says that I cannot make a speech about anything without dragging Jefferson in. He was the greatest philosopher that ever devoted his life to statesmanship; one of the very few original thinkers who have been brought into the history of the world. He was the greatest leveler known among men since the Savier was crucified. We haven't grown up to his high bleats yet, and I am afraid we never will."
