BREVITIES.

Every farmer ought to know that cut nails, heated red hot and dropped into cold water, will clinch as well as wrought nails.

Robespierre's walking-cane, which Baron Von Beust refused to accept last Spring, was carried back to Paris and sold by auction for three hundred francs, to a Lyons' amateur. A certificate of genuineness accompanies the curiosity.

Some folks are prodigiously penitent over other peoples' sins and think they have a special call to confess them to the world. They will gouge their brother's eyes out rather than leave a single note in them.

Violet colored ink is in vogue among the most fashionable young ladies of London. The Court Journal, bound to have a little joke, says:

"The little secrets which these pretty creatures write each other will thus be kept in-violet."

Malaga has set the example of religious toleration by granting a piece of ground for the erection of a Jewish synagogue. Whereupon the Jewish Messenger exclaims, "The Guardian of Israel neither slumbers nor sleeps."

A gentleman went to a masked ball, quite unexpectedly, arrayed in a gorgeous costume. An acquaintance addressed him: "Glad to see you here, but did not know you were to come, sir." "To whom you are addressed," ejaculated the disguised man; "don't you know your English history? I am the Duke of Buckingham."

A pet bobolink escaped from its cage at Newport in June last. A few days ago it found its way to the residence of its former owner eleven miles distant. It is needless to say that it was soon restored to its home, and remarkably well treated for a truant.

Sir Joseph Hawley, a noted patron of the turf in England, won twenty-two races this season, netting stakes to the amount of £18,920, exclusive of the sums realized by betting on his horses, which must have been very large. Another English turfman won £17,850 with a single horse, Formosa.

Quin was one day lamenting that he grew old, when a shallow, impertinent young fellow said to him:

"What would you give to be as young as I am?"

"By the powers," replied Quin, "I would even submit to be almost as foolish."

The following conversation, illustrative of Paris life, was overheard lately in the Cafe Anglaise: What a pretty woman! "Yes, she is charming." "And that Monsieur, is it her husband?" "Oh, no," replied the friend, sipping his absinthe, "I should say certainly not, for I have seen them driving very often, and indeed they were at Baden together."

A man in the employment of a firm at Blackburn, England, who asked for leave of absence to enable him to establish his claim as a voter, was refused. He however left his work for a short time, and for the purpose mentioned, was dismissed from his situation, summoned before the Masters and Servants' Act, and ordered to pay his late employer five shillings as "compensation."

An advertisement in an Irish paper lately, setting forth the many conveniences and advantages to be derived from metal window sashes, among other particulars observed, "that these sashes would last forever; and afterward, if the owner had no use for them, they might be sold for old iron."

A benjamin in Albany mistook an undertaker's shop for a restaurant the other night, woke up the office boy, and demanded "a dozen fresh ones on the half shell." He was told that the establishment did not furnish food for the living, but coffins for the dead. "All right," he replied, in muddled tones, "I'll take a little coffee."

A Dutchman, in describing a span of horses, which he had lost, said, "Dey wash very mooch like, 'specially the off one. One looks so mooch alike poth I could not tell totter from which; when I went after one I always caught de oder; an' I whipped de one most dead, because de oder kicked at me."

The Rothschild who died lately in France is found to have left an estate of about four hundred millions of dollars. His family is consequently in easy circumstances. In this country he would have passed for a rich man. All classes of people seemed to have mourned his death, and his body was followed to the grave by about 5,000 people, chiefly the poor of the neighborhood in which he lived. He is said to have been very charitable, and was universally beloved, which speaks much more in praise of his character than does the enormous wealth he had accumulated.

A fellow who came by the railroad, being a stranger, strolled about for some time on the outskirts of a town in search of a barber. He finally discovered one and requested the operator to take off a shilling's worth of hair. The barber trimmed his locks very neatly, soaped up the remainder very handsomely, and then combed and brushed him up till his head looked as if it belonged to some other person than himself.

"Are you done?" asked the stranger, as the barber removed the napkin from his neck.

"Yes, sir," said the barber, with a low bow.

"Are you certain that you took off a shilling's worth?"

"Yes, sir, there's a glass; you can look for yourself."

"Well," said the stranger, "if you think you have taken a shilling's worth off, I don't know as I have got any change, so you may just take the hair for your trouble."

On hearing this the barber made a jump for the man, whereupon the man made a jump for the door, which not being bolted, he bolted himself.
