An Irish Eviction—A Novel Means of Defense

A Dublin correspondent of the New York Times writes: The late sensational drama in London, which was said to be set in a picturesque district called Shanbough, near New Ross, in the county of Wexford, is, in reality, none other than a story of a highroad, evidently not an "arrest" scene, but a robbery. In the heat of the life of the army there followed a number of robberies, and the soldiers were carrying crowbars, pikes, and bludgeammers, ladders and other "implements," and they were known to the police as "the Shanboughs." The existence of a man who was a tenant on the property of Mr. Boyd, whose name was slighted some Saturday afternoon, was the cause of the robbery. The man, who was known to the police as the "Shanbough," was the father, who at the time escaped with his life as if by miracle. The Widow Holden was under suspicion, and the Shanbough family held possession of the farm house, and the large civil and military forces were proceeding to aid the police in the search for the "Shanboughs" by force of arms, if necessary. When the widow's house was reached, it was seen that "No entrance was possible," and the police were told there was tough work to be done.

The scene is well "set" on a stage crowded with actors. In the background are seen in extent, infantry soldiers on the march, in the foreground, a peasant, a widow's cottage, a fringe of cabbages, and a group of soldiers. The scene is set in their rear, and a back-ground of excited peasantry—men, women and children. In front of the troops are the "property men" and the officers. The scene is set in the middle of the day. There is heard the rattling of muskets as the soldiers bring their arms to the rest; the clanking of sabres to the clamping of blades; the shouting of the soldiers as they march; the angry talk of the peasantry in their native tongue. Enter now the first element in his hand. The door of his cottage is open, and the soldiers are barred from within. The soldiers knock at the door with the hands of his riding-whip, and in a moment what uncertain tone of voice is heard from within. The door is open. The Queen's will to him directed. There is no response save a derisive shout from the crowd grouped around him. But the soldiers, as well as silent with the colorage as if all were dead. The man knows that it is his last day, and this is the trouble with him. A sign from him the "property men" advance and set to knocking in the door with sledge-hammers.

ledge is the signal for action from within. From an upper window comes a deluge of boiling water on the men below. The men are shouting, threats and run swearing from the scalding shower. A wild shout comes from the crowd below. The crowd there is a short consultation, and then the chiefs of the expedition, and the "property" men again advance to the door, not at all with alacrity; again the windows on their heads, and come rushing in. In their eyes are the rugged faces of the men in the grating door, powerful fellow who has been bound, yea, leashed on the shoulders and back, takes up a great stone, and, with a shout, hurls it at the door, which shakes on its strainings, hinges, but does not give way. The men are shouting, and some of the "impetuous" men, and before some of its impetuous blows the feeble door groans, gives up, and the men rush in. But this is not much of a gain to

The storming party, who find themselves face to face with a well-built, middle-aged man and wood in the wall. The house is not yet taken by the military and police, who have orders to capture the garrison. The ballists set to work to tear down the bastion, and the falling water does cruel execution upon the heads and faces. It seems as if they had been boiling water in a great cauldron. The castle in anticipation of the siege; the supply appears to be unlimited. The barricade in the hall is at length torn down, when new soldiers are seen to be taking refuge in the form of the widow stalwart sons and retainers holding the pass armed with pitchforks. The soldiers are ordered to this destruction as more resolute. The falling water, refuse to advance. The bayonets are ordered up. A party of men, armed by the company commander with the pitchforks upon whom the officer calls to surrender or take the consequences. They would not surrender they say, and the officer, in consequence of their refusal, says they take up a strong position on the stair-landing. "Prepare to charge," says the officer to his men, and the bayoneted riflemen advance for the purpose of charging purposes. "Charge," shouts the officer, and away go the bayonets up the staircase. There is a struggle, short and sharp, and when it has ended the enemy lies dead there in custody and disarmed. The men are handcuffed and led out prisoners of war. The process of clearing our way through the house takes some half a dozen, and when it is completed the woman of the house and her daughter alone remain. They resume to tell the widow, with the last request to her, that the entire proceedings would be abortive. The end of it is that the widow's daughter gets carried off into the wilderness, and the legal process is completed. There are lamentations from the women of the crowd; the men are excited and probably, but for the presence of the soldiers, they would be such overwhelming force, they would plunge into the scene. The house is now garriooned in the Indian way, and the soldiers are to reform and march off the ground with their prisoners. All this, I think, leads to the conclusion that the dramatists who now write "powerful" plays are not only incapable of attempting to invent sensation scenes and stick to the facts as we have

A Nice Young Man.

A very high-nosed looking young fellow, in exquisite moustache, low-cut, gold clothes, red necktie, low-crowned hat, straw-colored kids and knitting-needle cane, walked into a tobacco shop and throwing down a half-dollar on the counter, said:

"Well, this is the worst town I ever saw. A gentleman can't get any tobacco in a satisfactory; and I am utterly unable to find a place where a fastidious taste can live here. I say, Mr. Shopkeeper, can you sell a fellow a decent cigar?"

"Yes, sir," and the cigar man, weekly,

"Well, now, fly around here and
hoi. Don't you see that half-dollar?"

"Yes, sir. What kind of a cigar do you smoke, sir?"

"What kind?"

"Yes, sir."

"Well, look at me, sir, a moment, and see for yourself what kind of a cigar would suit me," and he drew it out so grandly and gazed down at it so long.

"The package?"

"The package? No, no, no, and then look at the half-dollar, got out a cigar and handed it to the man with forty-nine cents change, and said:

"You owe me half a cent, sir, but I can't make change unless you take another cigar."

"The new young man looked at the half-dollar and then at the cigar and then at himself, and without a word he walked out of the shop. — Sanbenite Herald.

A Railroad in the Tree-Tops

It may not be known outside of the neighborhood where it is situated, but it is nevertheless a fact, that in Sonoma County we have an original and a new place of railroad engineering and building. It is not to be found in the books. In the upper part of this county, near the coast, may be seen an actual railroad in the tree-tops. It is between the Clipper Mills and Stuart's Point, where the road crosses a deep ravine. The trees are sawed off, an level made the timber and building on the stumps. In the centre of the ravine mentioned two huge redwood trees, standing side by side, form a sort of bridge support. The tops of these seventy-five feet above the ground, and cars loaded with heavy saw logs pass over. It was framed in the most scientific manner. — Petaluma (Cal.) Argus.

VEGETABLE INGLAND

HAIR

REINFEWER

This standard article is commensurate with its effects: one can understand such industry on a few dollars gray or faded hair. Its results are complete and permanent. It is a color restorer gray or faded hair to its natural color. It removes all discoloring and darkening, and the scalp by its use becomes white and healthy.

By its tonic properties it restores the capillary glands to their normal vigor, preventing the hair from falling out, and its growth is rapid and strong.

It is a dressing medium, and makes the hair soft, elastic, or desirable.

Dr. J. A. Hayes, State Assayer of Massachusetts, writes: "I found this dye of great preparation for its intended purpose."

BUCKINGHAM'S DYE.

For the Whiskers.

This dye is the only one that can be relied on to give the beard a color that is uniform and of the desired shade. It is easily applied, but will not wash off. It is permanent, and the color will neither fade nor wash out.
