avoid a further discussion of the plan of the committee in charge of the inquiry of Rev. W. A. Meyer of London, who will visit Salt Lake City February 11 to 12.

It seems odd that half a dozen men, total strangers, traveling without purse or pen, should spread considerable noise among the old churches of a large city like Salt Lake, but such seems to be the case. The Ministerial Union is a body composed of ministers of various denominations, and the Presbyterian ladies presented a rather strong appeal to it. It seems, however, that the petition was not reached on account of a "preliminary adjustment," and that action upon it was necessarily deferred. Very likely it will be taken up later, and what, if anything, the ministers will do to prevent conversions by the Mormon missionaries, remains to be seen.

The inference is that "Rev. Mr. Campbell of Utah," whose home, we believe, is in Mendon, Cache county, has taken an active part in stirring up opposition to the Elders. He has been "speaking on Mormonism in the churches of the New York Presbytery," and in the speaker secured for the anti-Mormon meeting, announced for the 17th inst. Wherever he would be willing to repeat in Utah the sermons he has been preaching in the West about Mormonism.

If the religious workers of Salt Lake become pronounced and active in their opposition to the Elders, at least one result may be counted upon with certainty. A great many people will have their attention directed to the leaders and doctrine of the Mormon missionaries, and the honest in heart will thus be reached. Agitation is preferable to apathy, for the spread of the principles of the missionaries are teaching.

OPPOSING FREE SPEECH.

An esteemed public enemy, contemporary that warmly supports President McKinley and his policy is also among the opposers of free speech in Utah. It condemns the action of a teacher in an educational institution who called the attention of his class to the President's New York speech, and commented upon it in a manner to show the students that the President had changed his ground. With all respect to the party faculty which our esteemed contemporary displays and with admiration for the zeal and courage it has shown in maintaining its political convictions, the "New" objector to the discussion of the discussion of public questions.

In all the large colleges and universities of the older states of the Union, political questions and theories, and the policies of presidential and state administrations, are fully and freely discussed before the classes by the professors. It is not infrequently assumed that members of the faculty in the same institution take opposite views of political questions, as witness President Andrews of Brown university, and his colleagues, and others, where there is an open discussion of the silver question, which difference, by the way, was recently a matter of national discussion. It is far from being hostile to the students to have different and conflicting political views laid before them, it is held to be beneficial to them, in that it stimulates original thought and investigation on their part.

Would our contemporary, then, be so graduated from the higher educational institutions of this state a generation of young men and women, who, though they had heard the President, have never heard discussed in the class room the science of civil government? Does it wish to see a generation of voters lacking the schools of this state with the best of the best of the state, and it is a moral offense for them to listen to an exposition of political theories that conflict with those they incline to favor? In the opinion of the "New," every phase of the science of human government, including the burning and palpitating political questions of the day, ought to be laid before the students in all the schools of the state, as well as before all of its suffragists.

It is the privilege of the press to advance such political doctrines as it believes to be right, and to argue against those it believes to be wrong; but it is a violation of first principles for a newspaper to undertake to exclude political discussion and instruction from an educational institution, that is a matter properly under the control of the management of the institution involved. There are too many men and too many papers new in this state, who, while they are puny and feeble, are just because somebody says something about politics at variance with their views. This condition is rising upon our fair young community, a reputation for bigotry or intolerance that will be its shame if not corrected; and the "New" would like to see graduated from our educational institutions a race of young men and women, whose political convictions would be broad and deep enough to endure criticism from any source.

Let the friends of political discussion stand aloof from whoever they will, let every man and every woman who has political views be granted the privilege of expressing them to any audience that will listen. Let such discussion be conducted by the members of the press, and let the press and public opinion be left to their own devices. The "New" has therefore expressed itself in regard to a change of the financial system established by the fathers of the Republic, but it firmly believes that a change in the money standard is not feasible with half the danger that is involved in such a change in the standard of American liberty as is indicated upon by the opponents of free speech.

RESTRICTING MARRIAGE.

A member of the Utah legislature named Taylor has recently introduced into that body a bill designed to "improve the race." It has been characterized as a "Spartan measure," but its author insists that it is "necessary for the elevation of the people as a nation, and is merely a proper precaution against increasing the diseased and criminal classes."

The following is a summary of the principal provisions of the proposed law:

"The bill provides for the physical examination of all persons contemplating marriage, and the granting of a certificate only to those who are free from diseases named in the bill. The certificate is to be retained by the state, and no license to marry shall be granted until the person has been examined by a physician, and a certificate of fitness issued. The bill also provides for the examination of all persons contemplating marriage, and the granting of a certificate only to those who are free from diseases named in the bill. The certificate is to be retained by the state, and no license to marry shall be granted until the person has been examined by a physician, and a certificate of fitness issued."

Legislative propositions having the general character of the Taylor bill are being much discussed now-a-days, and the restriction of marriage, substantially on the lines laid down therein, has many advocates. But there are at least two radical and important objections to all such legislation: 1. If enforced, it would greatly reduce the number of marriages and would give a corresponding impetus to sexual immorality, which, in turn, would aggravate the disease and misery sought to be prevented. 2. The law of nature which impels the sexes to come together is stronger than any human enactment, and the right to cohabit to it is one of the natural and inalienable rights of man, of which he cannot be deprived because of moral infirmities, and in the absence of crime on his part.

To say that because a man is unhealthy he shall not live, is to say that because a woman is unhealthy she shall not live. It would be a great deal better to pass legislation of a character to promote marriage, for the fewer unmarried people there are in a given community the fewer will this community be from the evils sought to be corrected by the Taylor bill.

Another strong objection to such a law is that it decides man to the level of farm animals, and puts the family circle on a par with the state. It seeks to bring children into the world as colts and calves are. It ignores the fact that children are born with the element of original sin, that attribute without which men and women are raised but little above the brute creation.

There are people who ought not to marry, but they themselves and not the legislative power of the state, should decide the matter, when it is a question of the person for matrimony. Inasmuch as property is prohibited from marrying, for the same reason that prevents them from making other contracts, namely incompetency, it is not quite proper to prevent by law the marriage of certain classes of criminals, especially if there are to be kept in confinement but there is a question whether it is not better to allow a wife to every criminal who is allowed liberty, provided he can, with one, then to turn him loose in society under a law that would prohibit him from establishing a home of his own.

What question is there, then, but the difficulties of the greatest, romantic and most complicated character, and there is only one solution for it, the conversion to correct principles of life, including a thorough self-discipline, and the individual members of society; for society can never become any more elevated in any respect than the average of the component units that compose it, no more when the unit is placed upon the statute book.
