Ben. Butler over-board—Narrow escape.

The doughty hero of Big Bethel, Fort Fisher, &c., met with a mishap in Newburyport the other day, which nearly deprived the country of his services.

Butler and Colonel French were pacing the quarter-deck in a style worthy of Admiral Jim Fisk. The yacht rounded to and of went a gun that made the Newburyporters think of powder ships. The yawl was brought alongside and Butler and French seem to have attempted to get in together. Now it is a well-established fact that two locomotives with "steam" up cannot pass each other on the same track.
Butler and French could not, nor could they both go down the steps at the same moment without damage to their political economy. French pitched forward and landed half in the water and half in the little boat. Butler was less fortunate. He disappeared and the murky waters of the Merrimac closed over his bald and busy head. But not forever. Ben appeared on the surface directly with a spout that is represented as a cross between that of a porpoise and a hunchbacked whale. He thrashed about until the water frothed like yeast. His jolly tars made heroic efforts to rescue him, but Ben's bald pate left them little to clutch at, and it was not until the honorable gentleman from Massachusetts had gone down for the conventional third time that he was dragged out half drowned, the most dilapidated, wee-begone looking statesman and warrior as ever tumbled into the drink. He did not go ashore that night, and is understood to have taken on board more water than the average Congressman requires for a whole session.—Eastern Argus.

There is no means more certain to bring disease upon members of a family, than allowing infectious matter to remain upon the premises. The offensive odors that arise from damp places, decaying vegetables in the cellars, unclean sinks, and privies, are almost certain before the sultry season is over to engender some malignant disease upon those who by gross neglect fail to disinfect at proper time the air around them.

Copperas, called sulphate of iron, dissolved in water, one-fourth of a pound to a gallon, and poured into a sink drain as often as needed, will keep it sweet. A little chloride of lime, say half a pound to the gallon of water, will have equally as good an effect, and neither of these costs but a few cents.

To purify cistern water, take one pound or two—according to the amount of water—of caustic soda or a similar quantity of concentrated lye, and put into the cistern; this will disinfect stagnant odorous water, and the cost is nothing compared with the benefit derived. It is said that two grains of alum to a pint of water that is not fit to drink, render it perfectly clear and pure, and the taste of alum will not be perceived. A little pulverized alum thrown into a pail of water and allowed to stand for fifteen minutes, will precipitate all the impurities, and leave it perfectly clear. A larger quantity put into a well of impure water will very much improve it.

A damp musty cellar may be rectified by sprinkling copperas, chloride of lime, or even common white lime over the floor. The most effective of anything we ever used to disinfect decaying vegetable matter of any description is chloride of lime. One pound may be dissolved in two gallons of water where it is desirable to use in a liquid form.
Another excellent absorbent of noxious smells, is plaster of Paris, one part to three of pulverized charcoal.—Ohio Farmer.

After the battle of Preston, Paus, a witty Scotch farmer amused himself by writing a ballad upon it, which so stung one of the English officers, who had behaved very basely on the occasion, that he sent the poet a challenge to meet him at H—, for mortal combat.
The second found the farmer busy with his hay fork, to whom he delivered the challenge of the redoubtable hero. The good-natured farmer, turning towards him with the agricultural implement, coolly said: "Gang awa' back to Mester Smith, and tell him I ha'e nas time to come to H— to gi'e him satisfaction, but that if he likes to come here, I'll tak' a look at him, and, if I think I can fecht him, I'll fecht him; and, if I think I canna fecht him, I'll just do as he did—I'll rin awa'."
