

Even If It Seems Like Work, at First, It Will Pay You to Add, to the List of Your Daily Habits, That of Reading About All of the Want Ads.

DESERET EVENING NEWS.

TRUTH AND LIBERTY.

PART THREE.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 4, 1905, SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH.

There Have Been About as Many Women Maimed and Hurt at "Pink Teas" As At "Bargain-Counter Crushes."

FIFTY-FIFTH YEAR.

The Saturday "News" Special Foreign Service.

HERE'S NEW FIRST MATRIMONY PRIZE

Increased Real Estate Values Makes Young Howard De Walden a Great "Catch"

IS RICHEST OF BACHELORS.

One Estate Alone Brings Him an Income of More Than a Million a Year — Has Finest English Home.

Special Correspondence.
LONDON, Oct. 25.—There was rather a special interest about the recent acquisition of Audley End, the historic and splendid Tudor mansion in Essex, by Lord Howard de Walden. It led one to speculate as to whether an American girl might not eventually succeed in marrying this nobleman, who, though he is only 25

The first of these, Seaford House, in Belsgrave square, now disputes with Stafford House, the magnificent res-

LORD HOWARD DE WALDEN'S MOTHER, LADY LUDLOW.
She Possesses, Among Other Things, About the Finest Private Collection of Jewels in Great Britain, and Will Probably Pass Most of Them On to the Girl Who Becomes Her Son's Bride.

and has been rarely mentioned in the newspapers, has spent the last few years of his life in dodging attempts to lure him into matrimony. For by thus providing himself with a country seat worthy to rank with the London palace which he owns in Belsgrave square this youthful peer has done the last thing necessary to make himself pre-eminently the greatest "catch" in the world today. And isn't it acknowledged that most of the other greatly desired bachelors of recent years have finally capitulated to fair daughters of the Stars and Stripes?

To exaggerate the attractions of Lord Howard de Walden, considered from a matrimonial point of view, would be rather difficult. For besides possessing good looks, a niteric ancestry and that rare thing in a youthful member of the British peerage—an absolutely clean record—this young nobleman has become one of the richest men in all Europe. He owns huge estates in Nottinghamshire and Ayrshire, and it is now estimated that he owns more valuable land in London than the young Duke of Westminster, who always has been held to be the greatest of London landlords and as such has been the

(Continued on page 22.)

AUDLEY END.

Recently Acquired by Lord Howard de Walden. It is One of the Largest and Most Beautifully Situated Tudor Mansions in Great Britain. Fifty Gardeners are Employed to Look After the Lawns and Flower-beds.

Why Kaiser Takes Himself So Seriously.

No Monarch on Earth Was Ever So Continuously Surrounded by Princely Courtiers, All Jumping at the Slightest Nod—Curiosities of German Court Which Swell Emperor's Head.

Special Correspondence.

BERLIN, Oct. 21.—Life at the imperial court of Germany in the reign of William II, represents the summit of imperial luxury and magnificence. There has been nothing like it anywhere in the world during the last half dozen centuries, for one must go back to the times of the Byzantine empire to find so much gorgeous display centered in one imperial ruler. The emperor of China, with his 400,000,000 subjects, the Mikado of aristocratic Feudal Japan, the Persian shah of shahs and king of kings, the splendid young monarchs of the east can not compete with the display of the German court.

The German emperor, who is extremely modest and simple in his personal tastes takes a keen delight in the maintenance of all this imperial show and display. He believes it to be necessary to uphold the power and prestige and dignity of his imperial position. He spends millions in making up his year and he constantly incurred debts in his efforts to raise the standard of imperial luxury. The German emperor is always surrounded by a group of noblemen of the highest rank, who occupy various offices at court. There is Count Wedel, minister of the imperial household, who boasts of an unbroken line of ancestors dating back to the eighth century. Prince Frederick of Solms-Baruth is chief chamberlain, Prince Eulenburg is chief marshal of the household, Count Eulenburg is master of the household and Count Zedtwitz is marshal of the court. Prince Hans Henry XI of Pless is chief master of the hunt. Count Aschberg-Falkenstein is chief master of the hunt and Baron Heintze-Weissenrode is master of the hunt. The Duke of Trauchburg, who simultaneously bears the title of Prince of Hatzfeld, is the chief cupbearer to the emperor. Count Waldeck is chief cupbearer, and Baron Brincken is cupbearer. Prince Hugo of Reichenbach is lord high steward and Count Eulenburg is master of the ceremonies. Count Goltz is master of the imperial kitchen and another Count Wedel is master of the imperial stables. General Count Posenherr-Solnitzky is keeper of the imperial wardrobe, and his brother is captain of the imperial castle. Count Kanitz and Count Kneiseck are vice masters of the ceremonies and Baron Esebeck is vice master of the stables. Count Truetzschler is vice master of the diplomatic corps and the chief controller of the baron and vice master of the ceremonies. Count Husen is grand master of the imperial theaters. Some 350 noblemen are chamberlains of the imperial household and 40 men of the highest birth are gentlemen of the household.

Apart from this vast array of aristocratic satellites the emperor has an exclusive military suite, a naval suite, and a secret military cabinet, consisting of two generals, two colonels, five majors and 42 other officers. Another department of the secret service is kept at the emperor's disposal, headed by his excellency Dr. von Linzen. The medical suite of the emperor consists of three physicians. These aristocratic satellites of the imperial person are bound to their interests with the imperial majesty by the strict rules of etiquette prevailing at the German court. Every officer, even if he has attained the highest rank of Field Marshal, must stand at attention and raise his right hand to his cap in a military salute so long as the emperor converses with him. If the conversation lasts half an hour the officer must remain in this attitude for half an hour. Men who are not officers must remain bareheaded when the emperor addresses them and must also bareheaded until he has ceased to converse with them. There is no exception to this rule, and the imperial chamberlain, Prince Buckow, has to follow it with the same exactitude as any workman whom the Kaiser may address during his drives.

A curious incident occurred during the Kiel week in 1901, when the Kaiser invited about 500 guests to afternoon tea on board his steam yacht Hohenzollern. Among the guests was the American yacht of Commodore Plant, the owner of Ingomar, which had been the Kaiser's own yacht Meteor in every big race. During the race the Kaiser, wishing like a true sportsman to do honor to his successful rival, walked up to Commodore Plant and addressed some friendly words to him. Commodore Plant not only kept his hat on his head, but just as the Kaiser addressed him gave it a rakish tilt. With his hat askew and his hands thrust deep into his trousers pockets, Commodore Plant listened to the friendly and complimentary address which the Kaiser addressed to him. The Kaiser was so annoyed by the American millionaire's lack of respect that he abruptly broke off the conversation, turned on his heel and walked away without completing a sentence which he had begun.

HOW TO EAT BEFORE A KAISER.

Ladies who are admitted to the presence of the Kaiser must curtsey so low that they almost lie upon the ground at his feet. All the ladies and women who meet him kiss the hand of the empress when they are presented to her when she addresses them. When the emperor desires strangers to dine with him he does not invite them, but the marshal of the court informs them that his majesty commands their presence at dinner on such and such a date and at such and such a time. The guests assemble and are escorted into the dining room, where the vice marshal of the court shows them their places. They must not however take their seats until the Kaiser has taken his, so that they have to remain standing round the table until the Kaiser enters the room.

The Kaiser invariably compels his guests to wait for him on such occasions, frequently as long as 15 or 20 minutes. Two heralds then advance from the direction of the Kaiser's private apartments and take up their stand on either side the door through which the emperor will enter. The master of the ceremony then appears in a gorgeous ceremonial uniform and bearing his sword of office with which he strikes the door three times. This is followed by the signal that the emperor is at hand and a moment later his majesty becomes visible, marches briskly into the room, acknowledges the profuse bows of his guests with a slight inclination of his imperial head and takes his seat. Close upon his heels follow those of his military, naval and personal suites who are doing duty for the occasion.

COURT CEREMONIAL.

The pomp and ceremony displayed at formal court functions are imposing in the highest degree. The cardinal state functions take place in the White Hall of the imperial castle of Berlin, a large hall over 100 feet in length, 56 feet in width and 40 feet high. The majority of the guests assemble in the White Hall, but others assemble in 10 other chambers included in the same suite of state apartments. Distributed throughout these 10 chambers the guests await the arrival of the emperor and empress. Their majesties' appearance is proclaimed by two heralds in medieval costumes of many colors, who strut along and blow trumpets. They are followed by a group of gorgeously dressed domestics. After an interval the head of the imperial procession appears in the person of the Duke of Augustenberg, the chief marshal of the household. He is followed by the chief chamberlain, the chief master of the hunt, the chief cupbearer, the lord high steward and the other high court officials all arrayed in their magnificent uniforms. They pace forward slowly with stately step, full of the dignity and formality of their dress.

STIFF RULES ABOUT DRESS.

There are very stringent regulations regarding the dress which must be worn in the presence of the emperor. Officers of the army and navy must invariably appear in full parade uniform with their swords dangling at their sides, and wearing on their breasts all their orders, decorations and medals. Ministers of state, high administrative officials, and ambassadors who move in the society are obliged to appear in court civilian dress, consisting of the black cutaway coat, black breeches, silk stockings and buckle shoes. The hat corresponding to this costume is a queer three-cornered necessarily exercise an undesirable and injurious effect on the emperor, and should be taken into account in estimating his character and qualities and his tendency as an autocrat.

COUNT EULENBURG.
Chief Marshal of the Household.

These aristocratic satellites of the imperial person are bound to their interests with the imperial majesty by the strict rules of etiquette prevailing at the German court. Every officer, even if he has attained the highest rank of Field Marshal, must stand at attention and raise his right hand to his cap in a military salute so long as the emperor converses with him. If the conversation lasts half an hour the officer must remain in this attitude for half an hour. Men who are not officers must remain bareheaded when the emperor addresses them and must also be bareheaded until he has ceased to converse with them. There is no exception to this rule, and the imperial chamberlain, Prince Buckow, has to follow it with the same exactitude as any workman whom the Kaiser may address during his drives.

A curious incident occurred during the Kiel week in 1901, when the Kaiser invited about 500 guests to afternoon tea on board his steam yacht Hohenzollern. Among the guests was the American yacht of Commodore Plant, the owner of Ingomar, which had been the Kaiser's own yacht Meteor in every big race. During the race the Kaiser, wishing like a true sportsman to do honor to his successful rival, walked up to Commodore Plant and addressed some friendly words to him. Commodore Plant not only kept his hat on his head, but just as the Kaiser addressed him gave it a rakish tilt. With his hat askew and his hands thrust deep into his trousers pockets, Commodore Plant listened to the friendly and complimentary address which the Kaiser addressed to him. The Kaiser was so annoyed by the American millionaire's lack of respect that he abruptly broke off the conversation, turned on his heel and walked away without completing a sentence which he had begun.

HOW TO EAT BEFORE A KAISER.

Ladies who are admitted to the presence of the Kaiser must curtsey so low that they almost lie upon the ground at his feet. All the ladies and women who meet him kiss the hand of the empress when they are presented to her when she addresses them. When the emperor desires strangers to dine with him he does not invite them, but the marshal of the court informs them that his majesty commands their presence at dinner on such and such a date and at such and such a time. The guests assemble and are escorted into the dining room, where the vice marshal of the court shows them their places. They must not however take their seats until the Kaiser has taken his, so that they have to remain standing round the table until the Kaiser enters the room.

The Kaiser invariably compels his guests to wait for him on such occasions, frequently as long as 15 or 20 minutes. Two heralds then advance from the direction of the Kaiser's private apartments and take up their stand on either side the door through which the emperor will enter. The master of the ceremony then appears in a gorgeous ceremonial uniform and bearing his sword of office with which he strikes the door three times. This is followed by the signal that the emperor is at hand and a moment later his majesty becomes visible, marches briskly into the room, acknowledges the profuse bows of his guests with a slight inclination of his imperial head and takes his seat. Close upon his heels follow those of his military, naval and personal suites who are doing duty for the occasion.

COURT CEREMONIAL.

The pomp and ceremony displayed at formal court functions are imposing in the highest degree. The cardinal state functions take place in the White Hall of the imperial castle of Berlin, a large hall over 100 feet in length, 56 feet in width and 40 feet high. The majority of the guests assemble in the White Hall, but others assemble in 10 other chambers included in the same suite of state apartments. Distributed throughout these 10 chambers the guests await the arrival of the emperor and empress. Their majesties' appearance is proclaimed by two heralds in medieval costumes of many colors, who strut along and blow trumpets. They are followed by a group of gorgeously dressed domestics. After an interval the head of the imperial procession appears in the person of the Duke of Augustenberg, the chief marshal of the household.

He is followed by the chief chamberlain, the chief master of the hunt, the chief cupbearer, the lord high steward and the other high court officials all arrayed in their magnificent uniforms. They pace forward slowly with stately step, full of the dignity and formality of their dress.

STIFF RULES ABOUT DRESS.

There are very stringent regulations regarding the dress which must be worn in the presence of the emperor. Officers of the army and navy must invariably appear in full parade uniform with their swords dangling at their sides, and wearing on their breasts all their orders, decorations and medals. Ministers of state, high administrative officials, and ambassadors who move in the society are obliged to appear in court civilian dress, consisting of the black cutaway coat, black breeches, silk stockings and buckle shoes. The hat corresponding to this costume is a queer three-cornered hat from their vicinity to the imperial person.

After another interval comes the emperor in his full parade uniform as commander-in-chief of the German army with a gold helmet on his head and a long plumed plume on his chin. The golden spurs on his high military boots click as he steps along the parquet floor. At his right side walks the empress in a low-cut dress and a long train which is borne by eight juvenile pages, all of aristocratic birth and all dressed in velvet. Immediately behind their majesties follow the emperor's aides de camp, the officers of his military suite, the officers of his naval suite, the remaining members of his personal suite, the ministers of state, the high administrative officials, all in uniform or in court dress. Behind them follow the crown prince, the crown princess, and their attendants and suites, and then all the other princes and princesses with their attendants and suites.

This procession starts at the Silesia hall and proceeds around three sides of the building to the white hall, passing through 10 chambers on the way. In the first of these chambers are assembled the guests of the very highest rank, in the next those of lesser rank, and so on down the various grades which are so carefully observed in Germany. As the emperor and empress enter each room every man present bows so low that the trunk of his body stands at right angles to his legs and the ladies curtsey until it seems that they must all fall sprawling on the floor. When their majesties enter the White hall the sight of 900 or 1000 men and women simultaneously making these deep obeisances is something to be forgotten. At half the emperor does not dare because it would be incompatible with the imperial dignity for him to enter any waist with his royal arms. It would be a grave breach of etiquette for anyone to take his departure from the hall before the emperor.

DETROITERS SEARCH PEDIGREES

A rigid social censorship is exercised on the attendance of persons at the imperial court, which is the most exclusive in the world. The first essential is good birth or a high position in the army, navy or state service. No Jews are allowed to attend the court.

MR. REID FIRST.

Mr. Reid is the first American ambassador to employ such a functionary, but no other American ambassador to the Court of St. James has lived in so much style as Mr. Reid maintains. As that is what Americans seem to expect of their representatives abroad nowadays—when they pay for it out of their own pockets—Mr. Reid is to be congratulated on his success in obtaining the services of a son of John Jay who played so conspicuous a part in the early history of the republic. The post is filled by the Honorable Walsh is the son of a controller of the Household office unknown in continental America but which exists in many aristocratic families here and in all Royal establishments from the king's down. In reality the controller is a species of upper servant, ranking several degrees higher than a chief butler, whose business is to see that all domestic matters run smoothly.

HIS FLANCE.

He is engaged to be married to Lady Norah Spencer-Churchill, the youngest sister of the Duke of Marlborough. She is a highly cultivated woman, and though she can hardly be called youthful, is several years younger than her fiancé. Her mother, whose constant companion she has been, is a daughter of the first Duke of Argyll. She married in 1883 the Marquess of Blandford, who afterwards became the eighth Duke of Marlborough. He turned out, as everybody knows, a thoroughly bad lot and his wife found it necessary to get a divorce from him. Doubtless her mother's sad experience has taught Lady Norah the folly of marrying for rank and position. As far as pedigree counts for anything, however, the Honorable Walsh is no bad mate for her, for he can boast ducal blood; his father, Sir George McAlpin, was the fourth Duke of Beaufort. This marriage will take place some time next month. They will occupy apartments at Dorchester House.

MRS. MARTIN MAY GET IT.

The Chevelley estate to which the widow of the late Capt. Harry McAlpin succeeded to on his death, is to be let by private treaty, and within the last day or two particulars of it have been submitted to Mrs. Bradley Martin. She is looking out for a country residence for her son, who recently married the daughter of Henry Phillips of Pittsburgh. She is a widow, Mrs. McAlpin, and frequently entertained the king and other members of the royal family during the racing and shooting seasons in fact nearly every man and woman of any consequence in English society has been entangled in some occasion or another. The shooting is said to name England, and as young Bradley Martin and his brother-in-law are enthusiastic in such sport it is felt that the place would suit them admirably. The only obstacle is that at present he can only afford a country property, and Mrs. Bradley Martin would like to buy a place clean out, so that her son would have a permanent residence close to London. The stabling accommodation is the finest, and the appointments generally are such as to appeal to the pocket and taste of a millionaire family. The heir to the estate is yet in his minority, and is not competent, therefore, to dispose of the property for a sum. The lawyer who has charge of the heir's affairs, however, anticipates no difficulty in arranging a complete sale on his majority.

PETS AT SKIBO CASTLE.

Little Miss Carnegie's fondness for pets of all kinds will in time lead to the establishment of quite a menagerie at Skibo Castle. The latest addition to her collection is a wolf cub. It was presented to her by Henry C. Brooks, a Scotchman living near London, who has for some time past been a devoted admirer of Andrew Carnegie. The cub was born a few days ago and asked if he could see the laird. The laird, who is an ex-London policeman, and was at one time in charge of a dog's home here, eyed Mr. Brooks' four-legged companion with much curiosity.

YES, WHY NOT?

Mrs. Fredrik Schott, president of the National Mother's Congress, said she had never seen a more delightful child than Edith Ladd, a delightful child of 10 years old, who is the daughter of James Ladd, a Scotchman living near London, who has for some time past been a devoted admirer of Andrew Carnegie.

Edith was out driving with her father,

her mother, and her father, to run through the hills, making a hunting trip.

The horse quickened his pace.

"Papa," said Edith, "why don't you whip us children that way?"