

FLOATING HOME FOR OFFICIALS IN NIGERIA.

The vessel shown herewith, which is a sound steel hull of good size, is stationed at Murek, on the Niger river, and has been converted into a lodging for British officers and government officials while waiting for steamers.

MYSTERICUS CARVING ON A TOMBSTONE.

The stone herewith shown is in Heysham churchyard, England, and no one seems to know how it got there. It is believed to be of Saxon origin, but it is a puzzle to antiquarians. The story of Adam and Eve and that of the cross are carved on it, but when and by whom the work was done there is nothing to show. There is no lettering on the stone.

NOVEMBER 19.

1752—George Rogers Clarke, American soldier and explorer, born in Albemarle county, Va.; died 1818. Thomas Jefferson called General Clarke the "Hannibal of the west." Clarke was the chief actor in the conquest of the west from the English, French and Indians. At the age of 25 he planned and executed the reduction of the British forts between the Ohio and Mississippi. That took place in 1778-79, and on the settlement of the western boundary, when peace was declared, it was placed at the Mississippi river. Clarke was active during the Revolution in pacifying western Indians, and service among them brought to his notice the beautiful country west of the Ohio. He subdued the hostilities, harassed the British, established posts and built forts, thus giving security to the pioneer settlers of Kentucky.

1886—Charles Francis Adams, author and diplomatist, United States minister to England during the Civil War, died in Boston; born there in 1807. The career of Mr. Adams in the place which his father and grandfather had filled before him is often cited among the foremost triumphs of American diplomacy. Lincoln appointed him to England in 1861, and he remained until 1868. The governing classes and polite society were either hostile to the American republic or grossly indifferent, and even educated public men failed to understand the merits of the struggle. In the settlement of difficult and embarrassing questions, like the Trent case and the Confederate cruisers, the American minister pursued his ends with unflinching firmness and perfect self control.
