A GREAT HISTORICAL FIGURE.

Title last three days have been more or less devoted throughout the country to celebrating the natal day of one of the grandest characters of human history-George Washington. He possessed a rare combination of qualities. While his combative force, unyielding determination, unflagging industry, un-

It is soldoin that the qualities that list. go to make up a great warrior and a great statesman are found in one person. It is even rare that a statesman who is great in times of peace shines with nurthing like the same splendor in times of war. As an illustration, Gludstone is one of the greatest peace statesmen of which history affords an example. But when the Empire over whose government he has several times presided becomes involved in warloke troubles, his resolution dissuperclute thin air, and his former remainess degenerates into halting, hesman and indecision. The late Lord Beaconshild was his antipodes. He section to tack a thorough comprehension of home questions, but when the honor, prestige or power of England was threatened, he was ready for any emergency His thoughts were like lightmus, his decisions were reached with remarkable rapidity, and they were put into effect with the same colority of dispatch. Although George Washington was probably not as brilliant as either of these remarkable men. the combination in him of the more striking qualities of each, made him infinitely greater than one or other of term.

hated them. It was a wise providence of our Heavenly Father, that difficulties and trials beset on every side out pathway through life; it was for our own benefit. But very few worthy men or women were found among those whose paths were smooth; this class of people occupied many prominent positions because of their wealth, but for whatever good they did they were praised by the world, and had their reward. One of the results of a life of contact with opposing forces, was to make of the Latter-day Saints a hardy, intelligen people; they had learned by experi-ence, and the wisdom given by our Heavenly Father through this channel rought a knowledge that cannot ! taken away. Success grows out of struggle to overcome difficulties, and if there were no obstacles to overcome there would be nothing achieved no victory gained; those who failed to

it is a somewhat striking fact that many of those who are now loud in their praises of Washington belong to the class who, were he now living, would be denounced by him as enemies to the country, because they resort to oppression and religious intolclance. There can be no question as to the position that such a man as Washington would have taken in regard to the legal and religious crusade againstin Latter-day Saints could be have been brought face to face with it He was not influenced, by the demands of expediency, but was governed by principle. The whole genins of his career was opposed to the central ization of power and in favor of local self-covernment or popular sovereignty. The advocates of the policy of robblug any community of their rights under the elastitution on religious grounds would, have been denounced by him as the enemies of free institutions. The supporters of such a monstrosity as a legal commission in place of populac representation and rule would have been esteelled by him as conspirators cublaced with trainorous instincts and frensonable molives.
