Manassas, Va., Nov. 1.—In the flitglare of locomotive lanterns President Roosevelt at 4.39 this morning started briskly from his private car in the railroad yard here and greeted cordially the little group of newspaper men, special officers and railroad men who

A servant handed to him a fine double barreled shotgun which he threw familiarly into the crook of his left arm. The President after a quick survey of the situation, told the boys that they had not proceeded from the woods, but that they were in luck as to the weather. The boys joined at once by Surge, Jim, Gen. Secy, Corby and J. T. Leenham, and Sheriff Leenham was to act as guide of the party on the turkey hunt. Presumably by means of the above terms, the president and his party
