Some of the ranchmen in the vicinity of Virginia Dale, says the Standard, (Wyo.) Standard, have a very certain way of killing wolves. They take a long pole which has considerable strength and elasticity to it. One end is placed into the ground and fastened down by a pile of rocks and the other end is allowed to project above a barbed wire fence. To this end is attached a rope with heavy sharp-pointed hooks to it. These hooks have most on them and they are hung from the ground at a sufficient distance so that wolves have to jump to reach the meat. This results in hanging the wolf by his skin with his hind feet a few inches from the ground and his entire anatomy in a very helpless position. If he is not dead when the ranchman arrives he is summarily killed.
