

HACK AND JEFF ARE REAL GIANTS

If Pair Should Meet in Rough Fight Bones Would Break.

MEASUREMENTS OF THE MEN

Fighters' Great Shoulders Overlapping
Wrestler Would Make Latter
Look Ridiculous.

What would be the outcome of a battle between Champion Pugilist Jeffries and Champion Wrestler Hackenschmidt? If they were brought face to face, Jeffries would tower above the mighty wrestler as the grizzly above the gorilla. Hack is less than 6 feet 10 inches tall and Jeffries is 6 feet 11 inches in his socks. He would be four inches over Hack. His great shoulders overtopping the wrestler, would make it look ridiculous, but there the difference in size shifts in favor of the "smaller" man.

It is a remarkable fact that Hack's normal chest measurement is as big as the champion fighter's even when the latter puffs himself out to the limit of his expansion. His chest girth is 43 inches, and Jeffries is 44, with an expansion of four inches. Hack's neck is five inches bigger in circumference, his biceps three inches, and Jeff's long, sturdy legs seem slender beside the short, powerful pillars that support Hack's massive trunk. What he lacks in height, he makes up for in his great fighting machine. He would never be picked out as a wrestling king, or the holder of medals for lifting the bar bell. His medals are built with a view to hitting, not lifting power. He has none of the big grizzly bunches of sinew that are twisted around Hack's frame. But he has long, loose muscled arms that can move with quick killing force.

MEASUREMENTS OF MEN.

Hackenschmidt. Height, 6 ft. 10 in. Weight, 225 pounds. Age, 30 years. Reach, 73 in. Neck, 17 in. Chest (normal), 44 in. Chest (expanded), 48 in. Waist, 33 in. Biceps, 15 in. Thigh, 26 in. Calf, 16 in. Ankle, 10 in.

Jeff's reach is five and three-quarter inches longer than Hack's and in his best condition he would weigh about 25 pounds less. Even in a rough-and-tumble fight the reach advantage is worth while, and the weight is invaluable in fighting, especially football or any game that involves bodily contact with the opponent.

It would be a brawl worth seeing. There would be no "dresome clinching." About the first clinch Hack would probably break Jeffries' ribs, and then throw him down hard enough to smash a few of the remaining bones. Can you imagine wrestling football or a 240-pound man if Hack hurled him into the corner angle of a room with every ounce that he could put into the effort?

JEFF A MIGHTY PUNCHER.

But while trying to get a hold, what would happen to Hack if Jeff landed on him as hard as he could? It has been said of Jeffries that he never yet has put his full strength into a blow in the ring. He seldom swings. Practically all of his knockouts have been delivered with a left hook. Suppose he had put his full strength into a blow in the ring. He seldom swings. Practically all of his knockouts have been delivered with a left hook. Suppose he had put his full strength into a blow in the ring. He seldom swings. Practically all of his knockouts have been delivered with a left hook. Suppose he had put his full strength into a blow in the ring.

of things, a strong man's power to resist injury is ridiculously disproportionate to his power to inflict. Neither of these men could for a minute bear up under the full assault of the other. Assuming that both are "game," Hack isn't as "tough" as Jeffries. Some time ago he decided to challenge Jeffries for the championship, and he began taking boxing lessons from Gunner Moir. He was getting on nicely until one day in a hot mix-up Moir smashed him on the body and broke a rib. Hack decided that boxing is too rough a game, and the talk of his challenge dwindled down. If Moir could do that to Hack's ribs, what would one of Jeffries' pile-drivers accomplish in the way of high class wreckage?

BATTLING NELSON AND JIMMY BRITT TONIGHT.

Los Angeles, March 2.—Jimmy Britt and Battling Nelson, who will fight a 10-round no-decision battle tomorrow night before the Pacific Athletic club here, have concluded their training and will rest tomorrow. Britt weighed 132½ pounds this afternoon, while Nelson is under the required weight, 133 pounds. The men will weigh in for tonight's evening. The betting is still at even money.

HORSEMEN IN BAD SHAPE.

Chicago, March 2.—Jimmy Splan, the trotting horseman, arrived in Chicago yesterday for treatment for hydrophobia and is now in the Pasteur institute. He was bitten by a mad dog on Friday while at Lexington, Ky. The head of the dog which bit him was taken to Dr. A. Lagonio, head of the institute, and after an examination the physician announced that the animal certainly had hydrophobia. Mr. Splan was put under treatment immediately. No bad symptoms have developed in his case, and there is every reason to expect his recovery.

AS TO RACING.

Westchester Association Close Twenty-Six Stakes Today.

New York, March 2.—The Westchester Racing association, which conducts racing at Belmont park, will close 26 stakes today. A special notice has been sent out to the effect that the association reserves the right to hold the races on some course outside New York state in case of a "freeze-up." About the first clinch Hack would probably break Jeffries' ribs, and then throw him down hard enough to smash a few of the remaining bones. Can you imagine wrestling football or a 240-pound man if Hack hurled him into the corner angle of a room with every ounce that he could put into the effort?

AUTOMOBILE RACE.

Des Moines, Iowa, March 2.—The American car in the New York-Paris automobile race arrived at Ogden, Ia., at 8 p. m. and will stay there all night. The car covered 110 miles today.

Michigan City, Ind., March 2.—Alleging that the crew of the automobile race from New York to Paris, which left here this morning for Chicago, owed them $65 for aiding the car from New Carlisle, Ind., to this city, several teamsters today had attachment papers issued against the Frenchmen, and a constable started out by rail to try to head the car off before it should get outside the state.

THE CHARM OF FRENCH RURAL LIFE.

Normandy and Brittany towns have a quiet sweetness in which the strident call of commerce and the bustle and noise of our American towns are strangers. Wherever commercial activity comes in the charm goes out. There is little striking in the contrast between the country and the small towns. You leave the brilliant colored poppies in the fields to meet the timid, open-eyed children in the village streets and you simply exchange the peasants working at the roadside for the white-capped women knitting in their doorways, and the men, wooden-saboted and clad in blouses and baggy trousers at their work. There are no striking contrasts between country and village such as we are accustomed to in America. A Normandy or Brittany village is but a cluster of cottages and thatched roofed cottages, nestling snugly amid the trees and fields. Of course the pastoral places lose from necessity the pastoral features of the villages, but in them you see nothing of the broken-down and often filthy outlying sections observable as you approach most American cities. If the section is one of poverty it will be picturesque—not made hideous with the dreary, empty cans and the town's refuse. Neatness and attempt at beautifying are observable everywhere. Even in the country you find the edges of the roads and the rows of trees often trimmed with care. No family is so poor that it cannot have some bright flowers in window-boxes and a greater variety in the always present little garden. One of the most notable features of both town and country is the absolute lack of filthiness. Thrift and industry are written everywhere. This is characteristic of the French people and it shows in their governmental balance sheet. For France has not one cent of bonded indebtedness held by any one except French people. When Bismarck levied a war indemnity on France after the Franco-Prussian war in 1870 it was paid "out of the stockings" of the masses with promptness that surprised the world.—Frank Presbury in Outlook.

Italian car arrived here this afternoon at 2:40 o'clock and planned to leave this afternoon about 5 o'clock for the west. The French car suffered a broken spring about 40 miles east of Cedar Rapids and did not arrive in Cedar Rapids until 3 o'clock this afternoon. It will be delayed some time for repairs.

THE SENATE STOREKEEPER

How He Looks After the Furnishing Of the Committee Rooms.

John McGrain, the storekeeper on the senate side of the Capitol, knows what it means to cater to the whims and desires of members of the upper branch of Congress and his force is probably the most industrious in the big building on the hill. His position, storekeeper means that he is responsible for the furnishing of all the committee rooms of the senate, and that is a big enough job for any one man, especially at this time when senators are moving from one place to another as the result of committee changes.

Some senators prefer green effects in their rooms, and if they have just moved into a new one that means to begin at the beginning with the furnishings. Others like red, and still others yellow and it is up to McGrain to find the proper rugs and the accompanying fixtures to make the room furnishings harmonize. Then there are some who prefer blue, and McGrain must have all the accommodations that go to make up a blue room handy and ready to slip in at a minute's notice.

Senatorial "finickiness" extends even to the manner of heating, too, and that means there work there are three brands of heat on tap in the Capitol—hot air, steam and open fireplace. Perhaps a senator has moved from a room where he enjoyed the crackling blaze of hickory logs to a room where the fireplace has been hidden back of a desk and the furniture dried out by steam. Then it is up to the force from the storeroom to change everything and arrange so a cheerful fire will not only give heat, but not be out of harmony with the color scheme of the room. Some prefer liquid soap, others insist upon the old-style bar soap. McGrain grasps in the fist, and the work of the storekeeper extends even to the personal requirements of secretaries and clerks in the matter of typewriters.—Washington Herald.

ON NATURE FAKER'S TRAIL.

Not once in all my observations have I seen any bird or beast display any knowledge of the healing art, unless it were the act of licking a sore place by the dog, a domestic animal. The broken legs of the milk and the muskrat, after they have been trapped, are ruthlessly bitten or twisted off by these animals. The broken wings of the ducks—poor crippled birds, how many I have seen dragging out their miserable existence in far hidden places, waiting unknowingly for the "freeze-up" that would drive them forth to the open bird or beast to death by man or nature.

I have seen them dab them softly with the bill. A broken leg of a shore bird never knits, as the wounded creature continually licks the wound, and it is self through the thick cover. The wild ducks display a certain amount of care in dispelling any water that has soaked through the plumage and down, and carefully oil the place. The bill on the oil tent and wiping it back and forth over the wetted place. Cruelty seems to be one of the characteristics of the wild fowl, as they usually drive away from them any member of the flock that has an injured leg or a broken wing.

The main characteristics of all the varieties of the species I have watched are greed and selfishness, especially among the males. With the exception of the Great Northern diver, who takes upon himself the care of the lately hatched young, all the males of the ducks, the rail, the sandpiper, the plover, leave to the female all or nearly all the nest building, her own food gathering, and the care and protection of the growing flock. The male quack-rats gather together near the banks and feast while the female build the spring house in the marsh, the male grebe builds herons feed in the drowned lands while the nesting female goes hungry or hurries away for a hastily taken mouthful. I have known a dusky mallard to half starve above the eggs which she has striped her breast of its rich down to warm, while her greedy male reveled among the snails and spatter dock of the marshes. In a very short time the male would forget that they have been robbed of their eggs. I have watched a spotted sandpiper running along the sands, calling out angrily at her photographing of the nest, but she was never so angry or excited that she failed to see the fat insects beneath her pattering feet; and her shrill note was punctuated here and there as she swallowed the needed morsel.—Bonnycastle Dale in Lippincott's.
