

"BOGUS" BILLS WERE GENUINE

Man Arrested for Pocket Picking
Carried Good Currency.

HE HAD TEN $100 BILLS.

Police Thought They Were Bad, but
Local Bank Experts Pronounced
Them Legal Money.

The police last evening gathered in a man for pocket picking. When taken to the station he had ten $100 bills in his possession. They were crisp and rather "tight" in texture, and the officers at once concluded they were counterfeit. Accordingly Acting Chief Burdette took one of the bills to Walker Brothers bank, where it was pronounced genuine. But in order to make assurance doubly sure other bank and currency experts were asked to carefully scrutinize the bill, which they did. Each one declared it to be lawful money, so while the owner may be guilty of pocket picking he was not guilty of carrying bad money, according to the judgment of local bank experts.

He was booked for attempted robbery and gave his name as Frank Morgan.

TO BURY PHONE WIRES.

Company Arranging to Build a Conduit—Progress in Big Work.

General Manager Murray of the R. M. Bell Telephone company has asked the city engineer for a line along which to construct a conduit for the burial of all the telephone wires on South Temple street from State to Tenth East streets. It is the intention of the management to push this improvement at the earliest possible date.

Mr. Murray, while recently in the Big Horn country, was much impressed with the rapid and valuable progress made by the "Mormon" colony. He said that for a radius of 10 miles up there can be seen evidence of marked improvement of the land, and, without exception, the land is being reclaimed from a wilderness to fertile and cultivated soils. A very complete system of irrigation has been put into successful operation there, and it is the intention of the company to establish a farmers' system of telephone connections all through this immediate section, giving residents of the Mormon colonies specially ready communication not only with Utah points but with Montana and Idaho points.

The company in receipt of a letter, dated July 31, from St. Anthony, Minn., from Manager R. M. Hays of the Bell Telephone company stating his company has found it necessary to build the line it has already put up in that part of the state, it is realized that the Bell Telephone company could not furnish the service already provided in the R. M. Hays company without an enormous expenditure of money for installing the latter company's lines. In view of this, the Bell Telephone company is now in the process of disposing of its property to the Hays company, and the transfer has been made by private arrangement. Mr. Hays says, "It is right to state that myself and associates have been successful in establishing toll lines and exchanges in other places, but the conditions we find here are very different from those we have met with elsewhere."

The loop at East Temple and First streets, which was the scene of great inconvenience in preventing delays, and this feature in construction will be adopted at other points of the line. It is the intention of the management to put in an additional curve from the east at East Temple and First streets to admit of loop work from State street south on East Temple and avoid all delays due to shifting of trolleys or stopping to switch.

BOLD SAVED BLOWERS.

Roll Safe Down Hill and Blow it Open in the Street.

Seattle, Wash., Aug. 6.—Cracksmen capped the climax at 5 o'clock this morning by carrying off bodily the safe of the Seattle National bank, then blowing it in broad daylight with 100 feet of dynamite. With rare ingenuity they lifted it out of the ground floor window and rolled it down the steep hill upon which the hotel is located into Stewart street. Here they drilled the safe and planted the dynamite. The robbery, which was a surprise to the police, was a feat of the highest order. The safe was blown to pieces and the contents, which included $400,000, were scattered all over the street.

THE AMAZING APHIS.

The following interesting story of the wonderful life habits of the various species of aphid, or plant lice, written by Theodore Wood is taken from the London Daily Mail of July 2.

The present year seems likely to establish a record not only for abundance of rain but also for abundance of blight. Concerning the former I speak feelingly for after enduring a fall of seven inches in 10 days in London, I went north just in time to get something like six inches more in a week. Concerning the latter every reader of the Daily Mail will bear me out, for in town or in country one cannot be blind to it. Every one has seen the ever low plant lice, or "blight," which are so common on the leaves of many plants, and which are so destructive to the growth of the plant. The aphid is a small, wingless insect, which is found in great numbers on the leaves of many plants, and which is so destructive to the growth of the plant. The aphid is a small, wingless insect, which is found in great numbers on the leaves of many plants, and which is so destructive to the growth of the plant.

INSECT IDIOSYNCRASIES.

In appearance these insects differ. There is a green one on the roses, a grey one on the apples, a brown one on the chrysanthemums, and a black one on the broad beans. You find one that is perfectly bare, another covered with a kind of mealy dust, a third clad in long hairs, and a fourth decked out with a sort of fluffy wool.

Some of them, too, have habits of their own. The aphid of the larch, for instance, comes out in early spring, when the larch is in bud, and it is found on the pendulous shoots, and eagerly feeds on the young leaves. One would expect the frail little creature to be torn from its hold. But it has a very peculiar way of holding on. It has a long, thin, curved beak, which it uses to pierce the bark of the tree, and it is found on the pendulous shoots, and eagerly feeds on the young leaves. their fellows have to park, no time is lost in development. Infants and mothers feed almost simultaneously.

HUNGRY PARASITES.

The fact that aphides do not multiply to an overwhelming extent is largely due to the efforts of three insects. The first of these is a tiny ichneumon fly, which lays each of its microscopic eggs in the body of a different aphid. These eggs hatch almost immediately, and produce voracious grubs, which devour the whole interior of their involuntary hosts in about a couple of days. Look among the aphides on the sprigs of any rose bush, and you will find many of them dead. That a certain number are merely empty skins, each with a little round hole in its back through which the parasite escaped. The second insect is the ladybird, or four leaf beetle, which is a North American native, and which is found in great numbers on the sprigs of any rose bush, and you will find many of them dead. That a certain number are merely empty skins, each with a little round hole in its back through which the parasite escaped.
