Dr. FOOTE, Senior,

Of 120 Lexington Avenue, New York,

Hereby cautions the public NOT to Employ or Communicate With a man styling himself "Dr. Foot, Jr." without making due inquiry.

This man came to Salt Lake City representing himself as the son of Dr. E. B. Foote of New York, the well known specialist, as soundly proved by affidavits. As rumors came into Salt Lake City from Dakota and Montana from an expose made there, he changed his base and represented himself as the son of a more noted specialist in New York City than Dr. E. B. Foote, the well known author, Mr. JOHN F. TROW, of the well known Trow's Directory, in New York City (forty years in the directory business), Ex-Governor FRANK FULLER, of Utah, and the Hon. ABRAM WAKEMAN, for many years Postmaster in New York City, also Surveyor of the Port, gave their affidavits that there are no other doctors in New York by the name of FOOT or FOOTE, excepting Dr. E. B. FOOTE, the the author of "Medical Common Sense," etc., and his two sons, Dr. E. B. FOOTE, Jr. and Dr. HUBERT T. FOOTE. The genuine Dr. FOOTE, Jr., will hereafter always employ the initials, E. B., in designating his name. Heretofore he has been known not only at home but wherever his publications have been circulated, by the name of Dr. FOOTE, Jr. Greater care will be taken hereafter, in view of the fac that an unprincipled person has assumed to profit by his and his father's reputation.

Those desiring further and more detailed information in respect to this matter, will receive it by addressing Box 414, Salt Lake City Utah.

Persons having information of advantage to plaintiffs will kindly communicate the same to J. W. Ivey, with Sutherland & McBride, Salt Lake City.

Those desiring to consult Dr. FOOTE professionally or to order remedies should address either

Dr. E. B. FOOTE, Sr., or Dr. E. B. FOOTE, Jr., 120 Lexington Ave., New York.

Consultation Free, in person or by letter.

A CALAVERAS CAVE.

HUMAN AND ANIMAL BONES FOUND BY EXPLORERS.

There is always something mystical about a cave at any time, especially when it is known to be filled with human bones. Caves are scattered all through California, along the great belt that marks the old placer fields, and many of considerable depth and great beauty have been explored and described. Calaveras county has several already well known, and now another, probably equal in extent to any and of no less beauty, has been added to the list. In this cave have been found human remains, besides the bones of many animals. What the number of these bones may be is now a matter of conjecture, as only a few have been so far uncovered. This country, from the earliest days, when the gold hunter tore up the virgin soil, with pick and shovel, and sluiced it off to mingle with the already yellow waters of its chief river, has been noted as a modern Golgotha, hence the name Calaveras, "The place of the skull." Many skletons have been found, more or less perfect, in various places, most of them evidently belonging to a race beyond the traditions of any now living in the State.

On the 1st of this month Walter J. Mercer, a young man, a resident of this village, was prospecting for quartz on a hill about a mile northwest of the town, when he noticed a small hole about large enough for a squirrel to pass through in a pile of limestone bowlders. On a closer examination he found a strong draft of air coming from the opening, and on dropping a stone into the cavity he could hear it descend for a long distance. Returning to the Oro Plata mill, about half a mile distant, he procured some necessary tools, a rope and a candle, and at once proceeded to enlarge the opening. Descending a pretty steep grade for about forty feet he found himself in a large cavern, the arched roof lost in the darkness and the lower ceiling hung with thousands of stalactites of surpassing beauty. Going on still further he came upon some human bones partially covered by the accumulated soil and debris, and about sixty or seventy feet from the entrance. Securing a thigh bone, and casting an eye on the surrounding wonders, he retreated to the surface to report his discovery in town. At first it was received rather doubtfully, but finally a party of three agreed to go with him the next morning to make further explorations. I had the good fortune to be one of that party, which, as the news spread, was rapidly augmented till it numbered sixteen.

The walk to the cave from here is a very pleasant one of not more than half an hour. Following the main road up past the works of the Oro Plata Mining Company, winding by an easy grade up the hill, we were soon at the summit of the San Domingo divide, from which the eye can take in a vast expanse of country. Pausing a few moments to rest and enjoy the refreshing breeze and the beautiful panorama spread out on either side of us we could look upon parts of Amador, Tuolumne, Alpine, San Joaquin Stanislaus and a large portion of this county. We could trace the great river canyons far into the meeting blue of the higher Sierra, could see the ancient river channels, long ages ago filled with great masses of lava; could see the blue stain that marks the great lime belt that can be traced for miles and standing out clear cut against the higher peaks beyond the famous Table mountains. Ours was a jolly party, and the sight of Table mountain recalled Brete Harte and the "Society Upon the Stanislaus," and some were disposed to make personal allusions as to the relationship of these ghastly relics for which we were searching. Down the ridge to the very crest of the hill we found a little trail leading off to the left, and close at hand, within a hundred yards of the road, we came upon the entrance. There was a pell-mell rush, each wishing to be the first, when suddenly a rattlesnake began his song close by the entrance. Then there was as sudden a retreat, each equally eager to be the first away; then a halt, and a few of the more courageous advanced to discover the intruder. It is not the most pleasant sensation in the world to stand with a dozen companions closely wedged into a chaparral so that you can scarcely move and know that there is a five-foot rattler somewhere in your immediate vicinity. He was found at last and driven into his retreat among the rocks.

Soon the candles were lighted, and one after another the party descended the long, dark corridor. We hardly knew what to expect, but we were not prepared for the dazzling whiteness of the walls and ceiling, the vastness of the room, the delicate tracery of lime crystals, and the wonderful grouping of column, curtain, stalactite and stalagmite. The main hall in which we found ourselves is about 200 feet in length, from east to west, by about 40 feet wide; the roof rising to a height of 60 feet or more. The south wall for 60 feet is as plumb as though built by a master mason; pure white, broken here and there by a heavy cornice or fluted column. Near this south wall, and about 60 or 70 feet from the entrance, we found the human bones, lying in a light soil. It would seem that at least three persons had been buried there. One of our party began to dig with an old miner's candle-stick and soon unearthed quite a pile of bones. One body at least seemed to be in a sitting posture. The bones, though in a tolerable state of preservation, were quite brittle. No attempt was made to find out just how extensive this collection might be. One skull tolerably perfect was obtained, and two lower jaws, one nearly perfect.

After gazing awhile at the wonders of this room the more adventurous began to explore first toward the east, where their way was soon stopped by an abyss that they did not care to sound. But toward the west they had better success, and room after room opened out to their bewildered gaze, each one seeming more beautiful than the other. In one room we came upon some huge bones, partially fossilized, apparently of some species of bear. These were about 100 feet from the other collection. We succeeded in securing a huge jaw in a tolerable state of preservation, and I have had the following measurements taken, which will doubtless be of interest: Length from ramus of jaw to extremity of canine teeth, 10 inches; from angle of ramus to coronoid process, 6¾ inches; approximate width between coronoid process—one being gone—7 inches; thickness of bone below molars, 2¼ inches; weight about 3 pounds.

The floor of the cave is rough and uneven, making exploration rather tiresome and slow. The descent in places is quite steep, being at angle of about 45 degrees, though at times we moved along nearly on a level and occasionally ascended. The ceiling is high nearly all the way and the air good. After climbing and viewing these wonders for about four hours, we finally sought the surface and returned to town. We estimated the distance that we traveled underground, from east to west, at about 800 feet. Hundreds have visited the cave since that day and the verdict is universal in its praise. It will take mouths to explore all its hidden recesses, as room opens into room and there are cellars and chambers beyond count. The ease with which it can be reached will doubtless cause it to be visited by thousands. A. B.

POULTRY BUSINESS.

THE MONEY IN FANCY STOCK

A pert young salesman stood beside a great coop of pigeons in a poultry fancier's store talking about the merits of three handsome chickens in a small coop before him, to another youth, while a white-haired old farmer from Jersey stood by and listened attentively.

"These are genuine Cochins," said the salesman, and they are an unusually fine lot. Cochins ordinarily sell for $12 for the trio, but the boss says that these must not be sold for less than $30. He is particularly pleased with the matched colors of these, and he don't care whether any one buys them or not. I don't believe that as great a price was ever asked for chickens before."

"You are wrong there," said the old farmer. "I can tell you a story—and it's a true one—about prices paid for fouls that are simply beyond ordinary belief. In 1850, or thereabouts, a number of bright poultry raisers in England undertook to increase the prices paid for stock they dealt in by pretending to improve their breeds. They imported a variety of Chinese fowls, and pretended to accomplish results with them far beyond anything that could possibly be done. They issued learned pamphlets, which discussed the new varieties of stock, and printed long essays in the magazines. The impulse given to the business was clear beyond their wildest anticipations. There were plenty of market breeders who were really anxious to get a variety of fowls that would lay more eggs, and would weigh more when dressed for the table, than the old breeds that had been common for years. The Cochins from China were the favorites. Wonderful stories of the number of eggs laid by them were told.

"Finally, the gentlemen and ladies of leisure who are always on the lookout for some new diversion, took a fancy to the chicken business. They cared nothing for the profits. They must have the best fowls in the Kingdom, fowls that could beat the record and show a pedigree at the same time. The Queen herself bought fancy fowls, and then it became the fashion to take an interest in poultry publications and poultry pedigrees. The prices begin to soar.

"The increased demand for fine stock brought our new varieties. White and gray Shanghais soon competed with the Cochins, and Chittagongs with Canton Chinese fowls, and heated discussions over the relative merits of the breeds were held on the street corners and over the stiles in the hedges around the fields.

"As soon as the mania was fairly started, fairs were held for the exhibition and sale of the fowls. Early in 1850, a fair in Norwich, England, bought out 102 lots of fowls, one of which contained 110 Cochins, belonging to a lady. The Cochins were sold and realized £361 4s. 9d., the highest price being 20 guineas for a single cock. Many single fowls brought from £3 to £7 each.

"That sale was the sole topic of conversation in all England for a month thereafter. The excitement lasted and the mania spread to America. In 1853 or 1854 a Boston Yankee by the name of Burnham, who knew a good hen when he saw it, sent out to a Buddinghan, England, fowl show, a cage of gray Shanghais. A trio sold at sight for $100, and at the end of the fair a pair from this cage carried off first prize, and they were sold to a Mr. Taylor, of Shepherd's Bush, for $500. This is the highest price on record, I believe, for a single pair. There were plenty of sales during 1853 and 1854 for from £30 to £50 per pair.

"People think that $2 per dozen is a big price to pay for pure stock eggs nowadays, but then single eggs sold for from $5 to $10 each, and it is on record that half a dozen chickens just hatched were sold at $10 apiece.

"You said the mania spread to this country," suggested the salesman.

"Yes, but the prices paid here were never so large. Boston seems to have been the headquarters of the business. Everybody wanted fancy chickens. The orders to the Boston importers came from Maine and from Texas, and one firm there sold in 1853 over $23,000 worth of fowls. There were single orders amounting to $1,500, and this firm sold one lot for $2,230.11.

"Good business that," said the clerk.

"Certainly. It costs no more to hatch and rear a fine fowl than one of common breed; in fact, it cost less then, and costs less now, to keep fowls of good breeds. Plenty of men made large sums of money out of the chickens while the mania lasted, and plenty who came while the boom was booming got caught in the shower. There were too many poor fools sold with forged pedigrees. People got disgusted, and then the eight pound Cochin hens went into potpie at ten cents a pound. When the craze died out, it left the country with a fine stock of fowls, and the prevalence of such beauties as these in the coop, for that there are a great many fowls that are as valuable intrinsically as these is due to the craze. But until fowls are developed that will lay eggs to order, something which people very much expected thirty-one years ago, there will be no more fancy prices paid.—New York Mail and Express.
