

PROVO.

Provo, Utah, - August 23, 1894.

All a Fake.

It has transpired that Mrs. Clem, the woman in the straw house, who told such a pitiful story of suffering and privation to the city officers, has been playing a game she has often played before. Dr. Taylor, the city's legal reporter, said that she had really been ill, but after suffering from a slight attack of cholera morbus, brought on by eating too much fruit. The city medical board, however, had pronounced her, but the nurse, had no valid justification for allying sick women and repeated impossible demands for this, that, and the other. Marshal Knight accordingly concluded to investigate the matter, and, when he learned that it was an old game of the woman to gain a place to show whatever the fibulous was her, extracting sympathy by means of self-pity, he sent several pointed messages to the medical board, telling them that if a man of like age, having the old game, would follow, and sometimes he would not, as he felt inclined. In this way they have traversed the city. The nurse does not know what is relative to this country. The case does not rise to excess, but is noted particularly for energy and industry.
