THE case of Orson P. Arnold, convicted on Saturday, on a three-count indictment, for unlawful cohabitation, the future, as construed by the United States. courts being again prosecuted.' The evidence for the prosecution showed that the defendant had, on a number of occasions, visited the house occupied by his plural wife for from President Joseph F. Smith apthe purpose of looking after his children and caring for her and their wants. In one instance he stayed over night in order to nurse his baby, who was ill and under medical treatment. It was also shown that Mr. Arnold's plural wife had accompanied him to Ugden, where they occupied separate rooms, selected by the clerk of the hotel where they stopped, and that while there they did not even eat at the same table. This is the sum of the evidence produced at the trial, and upon which the verdict was based. with his official career, being merely a step in advance in a tortuous path. Those who have been before the Court on conviction for unlawful cohabitation have been given to understand that if they promised to obey the law in the future "as construed by the the penalty, at least, would be omitted, and they would, on account of this public declaration, oscupy a similar position in relation to have "promised,"by the assertion that every one of them should have submitted a written statement to the Court to the effect that their marriages with their plural wives were null and void, being illegal. Further, that they should have obtained a decree from the Court to the same effect. According to his theory, enunclated on Saturday, if this course had been taken, conduct otherwise guilty before the law would have been innocent. The utter faithlessness of this position is self-evident, and will probably cause a new light to beam upon those who have given the "promise," they having imagined that they were practically, in the eyes of the law, in plural wives as in the case of parties between whom there had been a, legal annulment of the marriage tie. In one instance a gentleman, in connection with his agreement to obey the law as he did not prepose to renounce or repudiate his wives; he still held them in that relationship, but would regulate his conduct so as to conform to does not receive his full portion before what appeared to be required of him. Why was he not told that if he had the temerity to visit his plural wife the fact of his not having against him? has no special solicitude.

Mr. Dickson is overreaching himself. Because he can, by the perversion of judicial machinery, obtain victories over victims who are helpless he imagines himself essen-Bially powerful. He is puffed up with the plenitude of his egotism, aided by a cruelty that appears to be without bounds. He not only overleaps the meaning and intent of the law, and by the aid of a willing court and machine jury, tramples upon every legal right of those he seeks to crush, but he treats with contempt the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States. That highest tribunal of the land held that the polygamous status is not criminal. Mr. Dickson holds that it is. He says that it is the demolition of the status that is simed at. The law does not aim to destroy. that which is legally innocent. He is gamist should make the superrogatory statement in writing to the Court, and gamist should make the superrogatory statement is writing to the Court, and obtain a decree from the latter to the same effect? He holds that a man who does this can then treat his plural wife as he would a legal wife who has as he would a legal wife who has been divorced. Any conduct between them would be innocent under the Edmunds law, which does not aim at meretricious conduct. How much would the polygamons status be affected by that? It is unnecessary to reply. The answer is self-evident. Indeed, the proposition may be laid down with unqualified breadth, that the polygamous status cannot be reached by any legal process in existence. Its annihilation by that means is an impossibility. A decree of court may be made, but it does not demolish that which never had a legal existence. The most ordinary common sense mit County, U. SHAFTS OF DEATH WERE HURLED was Mrs. Julia Perkins, wife of Mr. T. A. Perkins, clerk of the First District Court in this city. The lady arose at her usual hour this morning. After a short time she stepped out of the house into the yard, when she felt sick and dizzy; she returned into the house, threw herself on the lounge, and called for a cup of coffee, which was fur-nished her. But feeling no better after taking the beverage, she sent for her mother, Mrs. Wm. Farrell, wno re-sides in the east part of the city. The papents and other members of the family at once repaired to the bedside of the afflicted daughter. Medical aid—Dr. H. J.
