MINERS KILLED AT THE PARK.

Charles Prosser and John O'Hagan

Bent Peak in a Crecent Carries

—Both Unmarried.

Another mining fatality was recorded at Park City yesterday. As a result the bodies of two young miners, Charles Prosser and John O'Hagan, were waiting burial at the hands of their friends.

It appears that they had just finished firing a series of shots in the upper workings of the Crescent mine in the vicinity of Park City, and were endeavoring to make safe some timber that had been cut down. One of the miners, with his gun drawn, started after the other and took some shots, hitting them beneath the weight. O'Hagan died in ten minutes before his fellow workmen came to his rescue. Prosser did not die until little less than eight hours later, and died at the same age and in the same house. He was unmarried. Charles Prosser, who was twenty-one years of age, a native of Ireland and without relatives in this vicinity.
