SMITHS AND BROWNS.

BY MRS. L. S.

"I'll tell you what it is, wife," said Peter Smith, and he emphasized the remark by a wise shake of the forefinger, "things have got into a very bad way. The farm is mortgaged to the last cent it is worth, and I owe a heap of money besides more by a long shot than I know how to pay. What is to be done?"

"I'm sure I don't know, Peter," replied the bothered wife, "but it seems too awful bad to be turned out of the house and home at our time of life. Now, if our son John would only marry John Brown's daughter Sally, it would help us out amazingly. The Browns, you see, are well off, and the connection would be a perfect gold mine to us. Of course they'd give Sally the hundred acres of land and things that they've always said they would."

"That's a good idea, wife," and Peter brightened up amazingly. "You always were a cute woman, and that notion does you credit. But do you think the young folks would take to it?"

"I don't know, but it seems to me that they've always taken a great notion to each other ever since they were children—been more like brother and sister than anything else."

"But suppose the Browns should object, as most likely they would. You know we ain't on good terms, thick as the young folks have been."

"I'll tell you what, Peter, is just the thing for us to do—put up John to elope with Sally."

"Agreed. I'll leave it all to you to manage."

Thus the matter was settled, and the scheming couple went to bed to dream of a speedy release from their financial embarrassments.

Coincidences are sometimes of the most curious character—almost surpassing belief in some instances. About the time of the above conversation between Mr. and Mrs. Smith, their neighbors, Mr. and Mrs. Jonas Brown, held an important conference.

"Do you remember that note for six hundred dollars I gave for stock, last spring?" asked Jonas.

"Yes," replied his wife.

"Well, it's coming due in about a month, and how under the sun we're going to pay it I don't know."

"Mortgage the farm."

"We've done that until it can't be mortgaged another cent. I'm clean discouraged; and there's Sally wanting a piano. Where the money is coming from is more than I know. We're on the verge of bankruptcy."

"I wish Sally would marry John Smith—gracious knows they're together enough to take a notion that way."

"Yes; but I don't see how that would help us any."

"You don't, eh? Well, I do. Ain't his folks rich? and wouldn't they set him up handsomely? Then we could stand some chance of getting help through Sally."

"That's a good plan," was Jonas' conclusion, after profound meditation, "but the difficulty is that the Smiths are not on good terms with us, and would be likely to oppose the match."

"Then the best plan is to set the young folks up to an elopement."

So it chanced that the Browns and the Smiths planned to dispose of their children to their own pecuniary advantage. The next step in each case was to mould the young ones in the proper shape.

John Smith was a brawny, handsome country fellow, with plenty of good sense, and an ocean of love for Sally Brown. When his parents proposed his marrying her, he informed them that he would gladly do so, but he feared her parents would object. Then his father slyly suggested an elopement, and offered to aid in carrying out such an exploit. John said he would think about it.

Sally Brown was a rustic maiden with much redness of cheeks, and rejoicing in the possession of the lasting comeliness which is derived from a bright smile, sweet temper, and a pair of clear, earnest eyes, made none the less impressive by the near neighborhood of a saucy little retrousse nose. Her wavy brown hair had not a nipple out of place, and her plump little figure was encased in a well fitting dress, which was neatness itself. When her parents spoke to her about John, she blushed becomingly, and, after close questioning, admitted that she would be "tickled to death" to marry him. She further stated that they were running over with love for each other; that they had long settled the question of ultimate union, but that they feared parental objection.

"Now, I'll tell you what, Sally," said Mrs. Brown, "you know pa and I dote on you, and would do anything to make you happy."

"We would do anything to make you happy," echoed Mr. Brown.

"And if you were to hint to John the idea of an elopement, we wouldn't lift our fingers to prevent it."

"No," replied Mr. Brown, "we wouldn't lift our fingers to prevent it."

In thus instructing their children the Smiths and Browns displayed very little knowledge of human nature. They should have known that John and Sally would upon the first occasion possible unbosom themselves, for how could true lovers keep a secret, and such a secret? And they didn't. At the next meeting each told the other all he or she had been told by parental lips, but neither could conceive the object of the old folks. However, they were not overdisposed to question the matter. They were too glad that the consummation so devoutly wished seemed so near at hand to question how it had been brought about. Conscious that their progenitors were up to some kind of trickery, they resolved to at once avail themselves of the opportunity to elope before any change in the aspect of affairs should occur. Having thus concluded, they proceeded to lead their parents astray.

"I've been talking to John," said Sally, demurely, to Mr. and Mrs. Brown, "and we have concluded to elope; it's all settled, and we are ready just as soon as it can be arranged."

"I saw Sally last night," said John to Mr. and Mrs. Smith, and she agreed to elope with me; so I think the thing had better be hurried right along."

One week from this time all the preliminaries had been arranged. Sally had been supplied with a bran new dress and all the other fixings, and John had been given enough money to buy a suit of wedding toggery. The respective parents were laughing in their respective sleeves at their own cunning. The Browns were overjoyed at outwitting the Smiths, the Smiths were happy at fooling the Browns, and both chuckled over a speedy relief from financial embarrassment.

The eventful night came, and John hitched up one of his father's horses and drove over toward Sally's domicile. When within a dozen rods of the house he gave a signal whistle, and Sally came out. Under the peculiar circumstances they feared no interference, and did not deem it necessary to exercise any great amount of caution. John gave Sally a resounding kiss, helped her into the wagon, and away they went.

Shortly after their departure two scenes occurred which must here be recorded.

Jonas Brown returned from the village store, and entered his house in a state of great mental and bodily excitement. The latter was caused by fast walking, and the former—but the conversation that ensued will best explain.
