POSTAL TELEGRAPAY.

THE discovery of Professor Morse, by which the electric spark was made to subserve the wants of man, was one of the most important, from its vast utility, the world has yet seen; but from the fact that this great invention has hitherto been controlled solely by private corporations, it has not accomplished anything like the good of which it is capable. The tariffs on telegraphic messages have been, and still are, far too high to be within the reach of the bulk of the people.

At the present time the cry for reform in this direction, is making itself heard throughout the country, and at the next session of Congress it is almost certain that measures will be introduced, which, if not defeated by lobbying, will lead to a reduction of the tariffs through the purchase of the entire net-work of the telegraphic lines in the country by the Government.

Already in some countries of the continent of Europe, this plan has been carried out, and instead of being owned by private companies and corporations, be sent to our Senators and Representatives in Congress, published in each of the daily papers, and that they one and all be requested to advocate the adoption of the Postal Telegraph system.

Thematter may be said to be now fairly before the country. Like all great reforms it is sure to meet with opposition. It aims to break up and destroy an enormous monopoly, and will, in al likelihood, encounter every obstacle that wealth can place in its way. Like all monopolies, this one has helped, by its abuses, to bring about its own defeat and overthrow, -now merely a question of time. The efforts of the postal telegraph reformers may be thwarted for the present; but the popular wants demand that for which they are agitat. life will be given to trade generally and ing, hence it must be speedily conceded.
