The Main Room, Mexico, with Willie Collier as the night porter, has attracted the attention of the largest and most representative audience last night that has attended within the walls of the Theater for many a day. It attracted attention as if there were a bill of lading standing over the stage before the first curtain was raised. Mr. Collier, who was seated in the front row, was the first to be noticed. He is a handsome man, but he has the kind of a face that is good for a laugh without a trace of the actor's art. He is a native of the West, and he has the same old-fashioned, friendly, and unassuming manner that is so characteristic of the West.
