concession or conclinatory propesal? The fresh attempt to reach an un-derstanding is described as getting over the difficulties of form by making a far-reaching concession on the merits of the question, but the misfortune seems to be what the Russians consider the question of principle, is that England de-mands the piscing of the treaty of dan Stefane before the congress for unreserved discussion. Russia, it is said, refuses to give way on that point. In Berlin, as in London, the subject is treated with scepti-chan as long as it is known that Russia refuses to yield on the chief point, and that Kegland maintains her demand.
