THE EVENING NEWS.

Bradlaugh's "Mission" and Auto-biography.

(CONCLUDED.)

Reporter—Were you then the leader of any considerable faction?

Mr. Bradlaugh—Not exactly a leader, although I was much consulted by men of my way of thinking, and was sometimes placed in a position where I thought it best to move first. Soon after my discharge from the army a number of poor workingmen, who had erected a building on freehold ground without any lease or conveyance from the freeholder, who asserted his legal right to the building, came to me for advice. Finding that under the statute of frauds they had no redress, I recommended that they should offer a penalty rent of £20. This was refused by the freeholder. I then constituted myself a law court, and with the assistance of one hundred stout men removed every brick of the building, and divided the material among the owners. There was no riot, no disturbance. The mean freeholder gazed ruefully upon the bare surface of his building lot, while the workmen congratulated themselves upon the safe return of their lately endangered property.

Reporter—What was the occasion of your first conflict with the authorities?

Mr. Bradlaugh—It was in 1855 in reference to the right of the people to hold meetings in Hyde Park. I gave evidence before the Royal Commission ordered by the House of Commons, and was very proud that day when at the conclusion of my testimony against the authorities the President of the Commission, the Right Honorable Stewart Wortley, publicly thanked me, and the people who thronged the Court of Exchequer cheered me for the manner in which I denied the right of Sir Richard Mayne, then Chief Commissioner of Police, to forbid the meetings in the Park.

Reporter—Were you not, while you were lecturing, frequently interfered with by the authorities?

Mr. Bradlaugh — Sometimes. Generally in the provinces. Seldom in London. In March, 1859, I was to lecture on "Louis Napoleon," but the Government, on a hint from Count Walewski, interfered, the hall was garrisoned by police, and the lecture prevented.

Reporter—Some of your lecturing experience must have been very amusing.

Mr. Bradlaugh—You are right. [Laughter.] Once I debated with a Reverend Dr. Mensor, who called himself a rabbi. He was about renouncing the faith of his fathers in order to gain admission to the Church of England, and had been put forward to show what an illiterate youngster I was. We both scrawled. We drew characters on a black board for four nights in succession to the delight and mystification of the audience, who gave me credit for great erudition because I chalked rather more rapidly and neatly than my antagonist. In 1860 I lectured under some difficulty at Wigan, the resident clergy having actually incited the populace to physical violence. A part of the building in which I attempted to lecture was destroyed by the mob, and I should have had a very serious time in lecturing or getting away with my life, but for the stout aid of a brave woman and her husband, who backed me up until the crowd quieted. I visited Wigan many times afterward, and so improved the manners of the people that I am now a welcome speaker there. I could not improve the manners of the clergy, as the papers recently proved, but that was their misfortune, not my fault. Early in the next year I went to Guernsey, in consequence of an attempt made by the law courts of the island to punish, for blasphemy, a gentleman who had distributed some of my pamphlets and had been condemned to imprisonment in default of bail. They did not dare to prosecute me, although challenged in writing, but the authorities allowed drink and leave of absence to be given to soldiers in the garrison on condition that they would prevent the lecture. They broke into the hall, and with cries of "Kill the infidel!" sought to silence me; but I quelled the cowardly mob and delivered my lecture. Just after this the Young Men's Christian Association had me arrested at Plymouth when I had hardly commenced my lecture, having only uttered the words: "Friends: I am about to speak to you about the Bible." They locked me up all night, bail having been refused; but in the morning their legal adviser discovered that a blunder had been committed, and a charge of exciting a breach of the peace and assaulting the constable in the discharge of his duty, was manufactured. The invented charge, though well sworn to, broke down after two days' hearing, under the severe cross-examination to which I subjected the witnesses. Two lawyers appeared to prosecute me, and seven judges sat on the bench, predetermined to convict me. Finding that the testimony of my witnesses was to be thrown out because those who did not believe in hell were then incompetent as witnesses under the English law, several Nonconformists, disgusted with the bigotry and pious perjury of my prosecutors, came forward and testified in my behalf. The result was a triumph, and a certificate which I wrung from the Bench. After the trial I announced in court that I should deliver the lecture, and that I should also sue the superintendent of police who arrested me. No hall could be hired in the town, and nearly all the open land being under military jurisdiction, it was impossible to secure a field for an open air meeting. Devonport, Stonehouse and Plymouth form one fortified and garrisoned town, divided by the river Tamar. I procured a large boat on which a temporary platform was built, and had it moored in the river, on the Devonport side, about ten feet from the shore. Placards were circulated, announcing that I would lecture "near the Devonport park gates." A large force of police had been placed in readiness for my arrest, but to their astonishment I walked past the gates, and stepping into a small boat, was rowed to the large one from which I delivered my lecture to my audience, who occupied an open wharf, all within the jurisdiction of Devonport, and only ten feet outside. The Mayor and his twenty-eight picked policemen were disgusted, but I very much fear that the members of the Young Men's Christian Association did not limit themselves to prayers and blessings on that famous Sunday. I opened suit against the Superintendent of police, as I had promised. The case was made a special jury case. Meanwhile, but the Devonshire jurymen gave me only a farthing damages, and Mr. Baron Clannel refused to costify for costs, so I carried the case to the court in banco, where I argued it in person for two days, before Lord Chief Justice Erle, and a full bench of Judges, who sustained the decision of the lower court.

Reporter—How did you stand during our late war, Mr. Bradlaugh?

Mr. Bradlaugh—My feelings and sympathies went with what I am glad to say was the feeling of the great mass of the English people—in favor of the government—while the aristocracy were openly exulting in what they conceived to be the probable break up of your republic.

Mr. Bradlaugh is a well-formed man of strongly marked features, large, bright blue eyes, large mouth, a chin betokening firmness, high cheek bones, and great breadth of forehead. He wears his hair combed back, and with his smooth face in repose might easily pass for an old-fashioned backwoods preacher of the south-west. His voice is round and full, his language pure, and with his heart full of the subject which engrosses him he cannot fail to enlist the warmest sympathies of the American public.—N. Y. Sun, Sept. 18.
