

Caught by the Carlists.

Mr. G. G. Stain, who specially represents the London Telegraph in Spain, thus describes how he was caught by the Carlists.

"At Lerida, we were to lunch, or rather take breakfast, lunch, and dinner in one, trusting to luck and Saragossa for anything in the way of supper. But there came an ugly slip between the cup of Manzanilla and the bottom of the glass. I could not sleep. The train seemed to me to be jerking backwards and forwards, then darting ahead, and then jerking back again as though it did not know its own mind—or the engine-driver did not know his. We passed a station called Rajadell, and between this and the next the behavior of the train became more eccentric and unwarrantable. Presently it was about twelve o'clock—weakenspeed, jolting backwards and forwards again, and then came to a sudden halt. Then arose a confused cry of alarm from the passengers, and the women in the nearest third-class began to squeal. There was something wrong, evidently. Then the whistle sounded, but in a depressed, shamed, and hangdog tone, and we crawled forward about fifty yards to find that something was very wrong indeed, and that we had been caught by the Carlists. It would have done the eyes of Sir John Gilbert good to have beheld the wonderful panorama of picturesque rascals suddenly revealed from either side of the compartment in which I was placed. How the pencil of our brave English artist would have rejoiced in delineating these splendid outlawed! Fine dancing fellows they really were—tall of stature, brawny of limb, well set up and all in military phrase, 'as fit as fiddle' for marching, and fighting, and robbing the mail. I noticed that many of their number—nearly one-half—were neither tall nor swarthy, but fair and slender, and with blue eyes. They were a bullet-headed race generally, and such a remarkable similarity of physiognomy as existed among them I never yet observed in any aggregation of humanity—not even in a camp-meeting of negroes. Their officers were far less comely to look upon, being as a rule, beetle-browed, and careworn-looking. There was an entire absence of stars and crosses from the breasts of both officers and men, who, for the rest, looked in civilian dress and spirits, and were all intemperately dirty. One gentleman I did indeed notice—a captain, I think—who was a bit of a dandy in his way—his to-day, he wore spurs, although the toes of his boots were in a dreadful demoralized condition. He had an eyeside, the ends of his mustaches were symmetrically twisted, and between his coat collar and his chin there appeared the faintest suspicion of a quarter of a century of duty. We were in 'the Alderman's walk,' so to speak, of an enormous petrifaction of venison, at which nature, assisted by railway engineers, and their various and blinding implements, had been officiating as carvers. In other words the rails ran in a dark narrow line along the base of a huge stony ravine, and on either side, on the grades of a natural amphitheatre, the Carlists were grouped by twos and threes, and tens and scores. They were clad in almost every conceivable variety of apparel, but in two items their custom was uniform. They all wore the same scarlet cap, of a loose pancake form, and they were all sandal-shod, their bare feet clearly asserting themselves through the ligatures crossing the instep, and tied to a sole of untanned leather. Thus shod, they will march, I am told, freely over any kind of ground, and then we were permitted to wend on our journey, while the 2,000 Carlist command, I was told, by one Gules, streamed away to besiege a town called Salaseta. In conclusion, I may remark that they did not take from me one single penny, which, I think, rather leads me to believe that the name of Queen Victoria is a tower of strength after all."

took three pesos—about 25 cts. a piece—each from the pocket of a Carlist, who could get a few minutes of his time here, and then we were permitted to wend on our journey, while the 2,000 Carlist command, I was told, by one Gules, streamed away to besiege a town called Salaseta. In conclusion, I may remark that they did not take from me one single penny, which, I think, rather leads me to believe that the name of Queen Victoria is a tower of strength after all."

THIS UNDERSIGNED NOTICES THE TRADE THAT he has been exclusively engaged in the shoe, cap, and boot and shoe business for the last twenty-five years, and he wishes to call your attention to the fact that in order to move the trade this season, he has made very large purchases in the shoe line, and will keep the stock full through the season. Any order that the trade may place with him will have prompt and careful attention, and at the very lowest prices.
