

SALT LAKERS IN GOTHAM.

An Amusing Incident in the Experience of Haverley Charles Frohman and "Jimmie" Harris.

Special Correspondence.

New York, Nov. 11.—The other evening in a conversation with "Jimmie" Harris, the old time manager of the Salt Lake Theater, in talking over things theatrical that happened many years ago during his managerial career, he recalled an amusing incident in which conspicuously figured the late Col. Jack Haverly, who recently died in your city. He was then at the zenith of his success, Charles Frohman, the present multitudinous manager, at the period referred to, was the treasurer of the then famous "Forty, count them!" Haverly's moustache minstrels were en route to San Francisco—preceded by Daniel Frohman, now the well known manager of the Lyceum theater of this city. With the idea of making their advent at "Frisco" as impressive as possible, new uniforms had been procured for the band to wear in the street parade, consisting of bright scarlet coats, white helmets, etc.—very striking and effective costumes by the way. They were worn for the first time in Salt Lake. A writer in one of the daily papers here, in speaking of Haverly's career mentioned the fact that the "bete noir" of Charles Frohman's minstrel experience was the street parades, on which occasions

Haverly insisted that "every man must do his duty," and he must do his duty, namely, join in the parade. Frohman and Harris, are built on somewhat Napoleonic lines—that might possibly pass muster mounted on horseback, but would not be apt to strike the masses impressively footing it in a parade. Haverly insisted that Harris, the local manager, should accompany him and Frohman as one of the leaders in the parade, to which Harris entered a strong protest—well knowing the "galling" he would receive from acquaintances along the line. Haverly, not being well acquainted with the lay of the principal streets through which it was desirable to pass, used this argument to induce Harris to assist in the ceremonies; the argument was logical and he reluctantly acquiesced to the arrangement. They started from the Theater. Frohman and Harris on the extreme right and left, in advance, Haverly in the center, beaming with pride and self satisfaction, his shiny silk hat poised at the well known rakish tilt—fully realizing the couplet contained in Eugene Field's verses concerning him—

"How grand you looked Jack Haverly A-marching down the street, A diamond in your bosom, patent Leathers on your feet—"

Frohman and Harris, his exact antitheses, looking for all the world as if they were walking at their own funeral. It is well to mention that the weather conditions were threatening, alternating sunshine and shower. They had just swung into Main street when the rain drops began to descend, and soon increased to the dignity of a shower. As they proceeded down the street, as Harris had anticipated, he was very enthusiastically received by the onlookers, which was more disconcerting than assuring, as it was all simply good natured "kuying." By the time Walker Bros. corner was reached the shower was quite pronounced. The leader of the band, well knowing that the uniforms must be preserved in all their resplendency for the San Francisco public, suddenly beat a hasty and disorderly retreat from the street to the protecting wooden awning which at that time surrounded Walker Bros' store, where they continued playing. As "a soldier never looks behind him" Haverly, Frohman and Harris marched on in entire ignorance of their desertion by the band. The crowd taking in the situation shrieked with laughter. The trio attracted by their mirth turned around and discovered the cause—much to their embarrassment—and hurriedly made for cover themselves. The storm continuing, the parade was abandoned and the three leaders had to run the gauntlet of merriment in returning to the Theater. Haverly thoroughly enjoyed the discomfiture of his lieutenants, and never tired of relating the yarn at their expense.

Perhaps no death in New York city has brought forth such strong obituary notices from the press in all quarters, for many years, as that of Edward Stokes, of Hoffman house fame. Every paper has contributed something eulo-gistic or disparaging as the writer has been impressed. The ghostly tragedy of Fred Stokes has been revived, together with his friendship for and ingratitude towards Cassius H. Reed and John Mackay, with many other unsavory truths regarding the career of this brilliant but most erratic of men.

Each week brings us some visitors from Salt Lake; now we have with Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Groesbeck and Mr. Ray Savage. They are here for rest and change, to see some of the wonders of Gotham, go to the theaters and hear good music. And speaking of music, reminds one that the Boston Symphony orchestra gave their first concert last night at Carnegie hall to a packed house. It marked the beginning of the concert season, and if one wants to hear the best music outside the Metropolitan, he has only to consult the north and west sides of that famous hall to find monster bills, advertising vocal, piano, violin and orchestral entertainments of the very highest order, and all from world known artists, from which he can make his choice.

Sallie Fisher paid New York a Sunday visit yesterday. The company is playing Newark this week, and Miss Fisher is now understood by Louise Gunning, the leading lady with the "Chaperones."

Jennie Hawley has been offered a fine part in the eastern "Burgomaster" company, and also an offer to create a part in the "Explorers." The piece to be put on after the "Burgomaster." But her interest in her vocal lessons has in no way diminished, and the advice of friends is to continue with her teacher this winter, and be in better singing condition for next year.

A little bird whispered us that we are to have a change in our presidency here. Fred, Robert McQuarrie, who has been at the head of the Eastern States mission for some time, and has become a general favorite, we hear has been called to another field. We shall be very reluctant to part with him, but there is a rumor that Fred, Nye, late of the California mission, is to succeed Elder McQuarrie. Our conference begins a week from tomorrow, so no doubts, it is supposed, will be settled in regard to the change.

"The Bonnie Brier Bush" company end their New York season at the Republic tonight. They play Harlem next week, possibly Brooklyn the next, then off to Canada for an extended tour. Their movements are very uncertain, but Philadelphia and Washington will be included in the tour. It is the hope of Stoddard to return to New York and finish the season, and if a theater can be procured, this plan will be carried out as the play has been crowding the theater nightly, and Kirke la Shells looks on it as the best card in his repertoire.

Last Sunday night Carnegie hall was filled not only to its utmost seating, but to its utmost standing capacity. The Fenians of the city were having their day. It was all a grand welcome to John E. Redmond and his associates from Ireland. To an impartial observer the whole thing was a novelty, such enthusiasm, such tumultuous outbursts of approval or disapproval, such bitter denunciation of their enemies, combined with the eloquence and magnetism that educated Irishmen possess, made the whole scene one never to be forgotten. William Temple Emmet, grand nephew of Robert Emmet, the patriot and martyr, called the meeting to order, and was followed by Wm. McAdoo, chairman, who introduced the three speakers of the night—Redmond, McHugh, and O'Donnell. It would be impossible to give a synopsis of the speeches, but Chamberlain and the Boer war were not forgotten by either speakers or audience.

JANET.

HER VALUABLE REFERENCE.

One servant girl on Long Island has a reference that should readily secure her employment if she ever decides to leave her present position. But she won't decide to leave if the family she now works for can help it.

One afternoon a few days ago when her master was in the city and her mistress was visiting neighbors, a man called and asked for—the lady of the house. When the maid told him she was out he seemed greatly disappointed.

"It's really very important," he exclaimed. "Could you get me paper and pencil? I'd like to leave a note."

"Certainly," said the maid. She stepped out on the stoop and rang the front door bell. The cook came to the door.

"Paper, an envelope and a pencil for this gentleman," said the maid.

The man wrote his note and sealed it. After telling the maid to be sure to see that her mistress got it the minute she returned, he left. That evening when the woman of the house had read the note and heard the circumstances under which it was delivered, she smiled and handed it to her maid.

"Jane," she said, "you may keep this. It may do as a reference some time. This is what the man had written: 'Dear Madam—your maid is no fool.'"
