South Alabama Conference.

In the afternoon the speakers were Elder Pearson, Prentiss, President Church, and Kimball, who spoke on the restoration of the Gospel, its divinity and identity with that taught by Christ and His Apostles, the power of Satan and the temptations and snares to throw in the path of men.

There were three evening meetings held, in which the Elders repeated their lectures for the past year and received valuable instructions from President Kimball. They were accompanied in their fields of labor as follows: Elder Pearson and Charles E. Williams, Florida, and Georgia Co., Alabama; Elder Prentiss and O. H. Henry and Dale counties, Alabama, and Elder Kimball and Andy in Louisiana and Greenwood counties, Alabama.

Elder Alfred W. Petersen was appointed president of the conference, to succeed Elder E. E. Kimball, who was released to return to his home in Idaho.

FRANK CHERRY, Clerk of Conference, Victoria, Col., Ala. Nov. 18, 1891.

Recollections of Mr. Farwell.

One day, over twenty years ago, I called on Isaac Hill, then leader of the Irish Parliamentary party, at his residence, Harlequin street, Dublin. Hill came into the room in his pleasant, genial way, shook me warmly by the hand, and said: "My dear fellow, you will have to wait twenty minutes; I have got a splendid receipt and I can not leave him. It is young Farwell—" at his house—and I tell you what it is, my friend, the man will find him an angry customer, though he is a good-looking fellow." This was the first I had heard of Mr. Farwell.

Mr. Bright, one of his best speakers in support of the movement, Mr. Farwell was not up to it. He failed utterly. The night after, I said to Mr. Farwell, "Mr. Bright has not been successful and his speech has produced a great sensation in the house. 'What do you wish me to do? I will do up—' one of our best men, and by doing, I can do no more. I quite recognize that Bright has not been properly dealt with. He ought to be treated as an old friend who has gone wrong. In fact, the story of his past career ought to be told to him in the house. His old speech ought to be read to him."

"Well, it is not too late yet," said Mr. Farwell, "I will do it." "Yes, those things ought to be done on the instant to have any effect," I said. "I will do it," he said. "That really is done not matter. Those people don't care for speeches, reasoning has no effect in this—"

He went on to say that he would read them by their own rules, if they kept to the rules of the house they will never get this bill through. I shall take care of that. If they break the rule they will injure themselves by violating their own rules. To either case we are losers. We shall have the House of Commons up and down or make them do it. When we have turned the House of Commons upside down the English people will think about home rule. You must lead an Englishman to make his mind up. He will respect you when he finds that you are his master."

While we was waiting up and down one of the corridors Lord Grosvenor came in; he was followed by Lord Kimberley and other members of the Cabinet.

"A Cabinet Council," said Mr. Farwell, "with one of its best members, 'they are at their own risk.' I wonder what they are going to do? Something violent. Those men don't know it, but we are doing them into home rule. We wait up to stop this debate (to be sure). Have you ever heard such nonsense? I shall hold him up. If they continue the fight according to the rules, we shall lose them. If they break the rules, and so force the bill through, they will injure themselves."

A newspaper reporter came up. "Will you speak tonight, Mr. Farwell?" "Well, I do not know. There is, I suppose, a Cabinet Council going on. I shall just wait and see what will come out of it. I suspect they mean to do something violent." A short time afterward the debate on the first reading of the bill was stopped by the Speaker, after the House had been sitting without interruption for forty-one hours.

Mr. Farwell was in bed at the Westminster Palace Hotel early in the morning when news of what had happened was brought to him. "What shall we do now?" said a member who had just come in. "The bill is just passed at 12 when the House meets," said the chief. He was in the room. The Irish members were in their places when the House met. Mr. Farwell was at their head. He attacked the content of the speaker in spite of the debate. A warm discussion ensued. It was kept up until late, when the House rose. So business was done. One day I said to him: "I am amused at people speaking of O'Connell's association and of your violence. I do not think you could, under any circumstances, be as violent as O'Connell." He turned around and said: "I was waiting with Charles Cross and said: 'O'Connell I think is quite the reverse. I should like to see O'Connell's speech. I am glad, however, that you do not think me violent. I do not want to be violent. The thing is to be gentle without being violent.' But sometimes you must be violent. Bright once said to me: 'I do not object to violence, provided it rests on a moral basis.'" "O'Connell," he said, "is not."

Rightly, he said that the violence of the Land League does not rest on a moral basis. "I am surprised, but did Mr. Bright say that the violence of the British Government in Ireland does not rest on a moral basis? I must go. Good night!" and we parted.

There are recollections of old days, says the writer in the London Illustrated News. The time for writing of more recent events has not yet come. But I may repeat the last words I heard Mr. Farwell speak: They show the character of the man. It was at Dublin. He was on his way to Ireland. Someone said: "Well, Mr. Farwell, I do not think you will come back from the general election with five followers. In fact, I think you will come back absolutely alone." He smiled, and said calmly: "Well, if I do come back absolutely alone, one thing is certain—I shall then represent a party whose independence will not be supported." He passed into the train, and I saw him no more.

BUSINESS WITH PLEASURE.

WAS ONE OF AN IMPROBABLE SUCCESS AS A WEDDING PRESENT.

The brilliant strains of the "Wedding March," played on the magnificent organ by the eminent musician as it never had been played before within these walls pointed through the church.

slowly down the aisle came the wedding party, slowly and in perfect form the principals and their friends and attendants ranged themselves in front of the altar and stood waiting.

The music ceased and a solemn hush fell upon the assembly.

Arrayed in bridal robes whose costly elegance and fashion took mightily to the eye, the bride stood in the doorway of her lovely face and form glowing the bridegroom who was about to give her happiness into the hands of another.

Proud and happy, with conscious strength and manly tenderness visible in every feature of his handsome face and in every line of his magnificent uniform, the bridegroom stood without flinching the most eminent man who had chosen her from the world as his bride's mate.

The clergyman broke the silence. In deep tones he began the impressive, time-honored ceremony that prescribes the way for the legal solemnization of the sacrament of marriage and proceeded until he came to these ever memorable words:

"If any man here show just cause why they may not lawfully be joined together, let him now speak or else hereafter forever hold his peace."

WORLD'S FAIR NOTES.

The number of intending exhibitors who have applied for space at the Exposition reached 250 on Oct. 2.

One acre of ground within the Horticultural building has been reserved for an orange grove from Florida and the same amount for a grove from California. These trees will be brought to Chicago next year and planted, so that they will bear fruit within the Exposition season. These two acres contain two interior courts of the building.

Wisconsin's building at the Exposition will be 30 x 90 feet, three stories high, and of the Queen Anne style of architecture.

Florida's Exposition building will be a half-mile reproduction of Fort Marion, which was built at St. Augustine in 1520, and is believed to be the oldest building in the United States. It is of stone and covers a space of about 150 feet square.

AFTER CAREFUL EXAMINATION

We find that a great many lines of goods are damaged to some extent by SMOKE! This applies more particularly to White and Light Shades, in nearly all materials, and if such are permitted to remain on the shelves for any length of time without being exposed to the air, they will be in a worse condition than they are at present. Consequently
